Use 'Force,' Hitler Orders; Gets Danzig; Poles Bombed

Forster Directs Anschluss With Reich, Fuehrer Accepts City

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 1.—Adolf Hitler today accepted the Free City of Danzig into the Reich, soon after the German official news agency, DNB, announced that Albert Forster, Nazi chief of state in Danzig, had proclaimed reunion of the Free City with the Reich.

Poland has declared repeatedly that "anschluss" would mean war.

Forster notified Hitler of his action, by telegram.

"I acknowledge your proclamation of the return of the Free City of Danzig to the Reich," the Fuehrer telegraphed in reply.

"I thank you, Gauleiter Forster, and all Danzig men and women, for your loyalty which you have displayed for so many years.

"Greater Germany welcomes you with joy in her heart.

"The law of reunion will be enacted forthwith. I appoint you, Herr Forster, chief of the civil administration in the Danzig territory."

Forster's telegram to Hitler read:

"My Fuehrer. I have just signed and then put into effect the following basic law, concerning the reunion of Danzig with the German Reich.

"The basic law of the Free State of Danzig and the reunion of Danzig with the German Reich is effective September 1, 1939.

"To lift the immediate distress of the people and state of the Free City of Danzig, I decree the following basic state law:

"Article one: The constitution of the Free City of Danzig has been suspended effective immediately.

"Article two: All legal and administrative power will be executed exclusively by the head of state (Forster).

Asks Hitler's Consent

"Article three: The Free City of Danzig with its territory and its peoples forms a part of the German Reich, effective immediately.

"Article four: Until a final decision regarding the introduction of German Reich's laws by the Fuehrer, the entire laws of the constitution remain in force as they apply at the moment.

Signed at Danzig, September 1, 1939, Albert Forster, Gauleiter (District leader.)"

"I beg you, my Fuehrer, in the name of Danzig and its population to consent to this basic state law and to carry out the reunion with the German Reich through federal law.

"Obediently, My Fuehrer, Danzig pledges to you imperishable thankfulness and eternal loyalty. Hail my Fuehrer.

"Signed, ALBERT FORSTER, "Gauleiter."

"The Hour Has Come"

Forster followed the act with a proclamation to Danzigers that "the hour for which yau have longed for 20 years has come.

"Effective today, Danzig has returned to the Great German Reich. Our Fuehrer, Adolf Hitler, has freed us."

"The swastika flag, the flag of the German Reich, waves for the first time today on the public buildings in Danzig. It waves, however, also from former Polish buildings and everywhere in the harbor.

"Church bells peal forth and we thank the Lord for our liberation and also the Fuehrer, who has given us the opportunity to get rid of the evils of the Versailles Treaty.

In a telegram to Forster, Hitler acknowledged the reception of Forster's proclamation and thanked him for "the loyalty of Danzig to Germans."

He declared a newly proclaimed law by Forster for the reunion of Danzig to Germany "immediately effective" and named Forster, already chosen by the Danzig Senate as chief of state, to head the city government.

"We Danzigers are happy now also to be allowed to be citizens of the Reich. Danzig men and women, in this ceremonial hour, we want to stand together, clasp hands and give the Fuehrer a holy promise to do everything within our power for our wonderful great Germany.

"Danzig is now returned home into the Reich. Long live our great German fatherland. Long live our beloved Fuehrer, Adolf Hitler."

Four Towns Raided; Cannon Fire Heard

Warsaw, Sept. 1 (AP).—It was reported here today that Krakow, Katowice, Tczew and Czestocohowa were bombed by German airplanes early this morning.

There was no official confirmation of the bombing. Fighting was reported at Danzig.

Warsaw was awakened at 6:20 a. m. (12:20 a. m., E. S. T.) by alarming sirens as an air raid was awaited here.

The highwy between Hindenburg and Beuthen, two of the leading industrial cities of Upper Silesia, was closed early today, and heavy tank hindrances were thrown across the roadway.

Yesterday several officers were called from their afternoon coffee by messengers from company headquarters. The hotel headquarters here was almost deserted this morning.

Gleiwitz, Germany, Sept. 1 (A.P.):—(Direct)—Gleiwitz residents reported artillery fire was heard "in the distance" at 5:30 a. m. today (11:30 p. m. E. S. T., Thursday). Gleiwitz is but a few miles from the Polish-Silesian border. The largest troop movements seen here since the night of last Friday and Saturday were noted this morning between Beuthen and Gleiwitz.

An almost unbroken line of pack wagons, artillery, cavalry, motorized machine guns and military lorries and infantry was to be seen earlier this morning.

Reichstag Called to Meet Today

Berlin, Sept. 1 (AP).—Adolf Hitler summoned the Reichstag to meet at 10 A. M. (4 A. M., E.S.T.).

From early morning electricians installed loudspeakers in the principal parts of the city. Before the chancellery an unusually large detachment of S. S. men formed a protective cordon. Members of the Reichstag who had been awaiting the call in the capital since yesterday all wore uniforms. In ministries, too, officials wore the uniforms of their various formations and ranks.

Officials Report Fighting to Paris

Paris, Sept. 1 (A.P.).—The Havas (French) News Agency said today that official French dispatches from Germany indicated that "the Reich began hostilities on Poland this morning."

Germans Report Consulate Bombed

Berlin (Friday), Sept. 1 (INS).—The German consulate at Teschen has been bombed by "Polish insurgents," it was reported early today by DNB, official Nazi news agency. Two German printing shops also were destroyed, the agency stated.

Meuse Bridges Blown Up

Brussels (Friday), Sept. 1 (AP) (Passed by the British Censor).—Two bridges over the River Meuse at Liege, collapsed during a violent thunderstorm late last night. Reports placed the dead at 10 and the injured at 37. The accidents apparently were due to lightning striking dynamite placed at the bridges for defensive purposes.

Belgium Calls More Men

Brussels (Friday), Sept. 1 (AP) (Passed by British Censor). The Belgian cabinet early today ordered the third stage of mobilization effective immediately as a precautionary move.

Slovakia Asks Land Back From Poles

Bratislava, Slovakia, Aug. 31 (AP) (Passed by British Censor).—The Slovak government, replying to a Polish protest concerning occupation of Slovakia by German troops, called on Poland tonight to return territory to Slovakia. Meanwhile German bombers flew in increasing numbers over the Slovak capital toward the Polish frontier, where 500,000 German troops were reported in position.

Nazis Warn Neutral Planes Over Poland

Berlin (Friday), Sept. 1 (UP).—The German radio said today that "military operations over the Bay of Danzig and over the territory of Poland have to be reckoned with." The announcement said the air minister warned all neutral aircraft "in its own interests not to fly over the area bounded by the territory of Poland and the maritime area limited on the west by 5 degrees longitude, east, and the Polish frontier to the east by 20 degrees near Bruestarort and to the north by 55 degrees latitude."

Nazi Liner to Leave 750 at Cuba

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—The German liner Columbus, carrying 750 passengers on a Caribbean cruise, will drop them at Havana, Cuba, tomorrow instead of bringing them to New

Martial Law Reported in Poland

Berlin Protests Closing of Consulates

16 Nazi Points 'Unacceptable' Warsaw Says; Yields Nothing

By the Associated Press

Warsaw, Aug. 31.—The conditions of Fuehrer Hitler's proposals for settlement of the Polish-German dispute, such as immediate return of Danzig to Germany, are unacceptable to Poland, a government spokesman said tonight.

The spokesman emphasized that Poland was determined to keep Pomorze (the Polish Corridor) and her rights in the Free City of Danzig.

Of Hitler's proposal for a plebiscite in Pomorze, one reaction here was: "Germany can begin with Czecho-Slovakia if she is interested in a plebiscite."

Polish Counter-Demand

In reply to Hitler's "terms" as announced by the German radio tonight, it was stated Poland will insist upon full restitution of her rights in Danzig.

(Danzig is under Polish customs administration, and certain Polish customs and railway functions have been reported taken over by Nazis in the past few days.)

"Hitler insists on Poland yielding Danzig and Pomorze as a preliminary to negotiations," the spokesman said. "Poland has not given up Danzig and Pomorze, and will not.

"Britain, in a second reply to Hitler, has maintained her unyielding position without change."

He emphasized that Poland always has been interested in a peaceful settlement, but that the conditions of the proposals could not be accepted.

British Reassure Warsaw

As the spokesman disclosed that the government had refused to send a mission to Berlin to talk with Hitler, which the Fuehrer proposed, hope for peace faded.

Sir Howard William Kennard, the British Ambassador, called upon Foreign Minister Beck to reiterate Britain's stand in support of Poland in case of aggression against her, it was stated.

It was reported that ten Germans had been arrested on charges of plotting to dynamite the central station in Warsaw.

Beginning at midnight, all civilians must have permits to travel on trains.

Solemn, fully armed and watchful, Poland saw several hundred thousand newly mobilized recruits take swift leave of city, town and farm today in what amounted to nearly complete mobilization of the nation's fighting strength.

Invasion Charged

New frontier incidents were reported, Polish sources asserting that German patrols crossed the border into Polish territory at several points. They also reported that a German bomber flew over Polish Silesia and was pursued by Polish planes.

The stern charge here that Danzig now is virtually under complete control of Germany was intensified by reports from the Free City of what Poles called "new aggressive activity" by Danzig Nazis. One was that all communications between Danzig and the Polish port of Gdynia had been cut off.

Polish railway lines to Gdynia run through Danzig, where all railway stations already have been occupied by Free City Nazis.

The mobilization was in full swing tonight and foreign experts agreed that it was being carried out with undoubted skill and efficiency.

Three trainloads of reservists left Warsaw. There were emotional scenes as families and relatives saw them off, but there was a marked absence of tears.

Peasant youths trudged the highways to their mobilization centers. Horses fresh from harvest duties were being led in for military transport.

Those older men not yet called up rushed to volunteer in such large numbers that authorities asked them to remain away from military concentration points for the time being.

The organ of the New Zionists promised that Poland's 3,500,000

Germany Blockades Gdynia; Orders Ships Out of Baltic

Berlin, Sept. 1 (Friday) (A.P.)—(Filed Berlin 8:30 A. M. Friday).—Adolf Hitler proclaimed to his army today his intention of meeting "force with force," and ordered a blockade of the Polish port of Gdynia.

Shortly afterward, Albert Forster, chief of state of the Free City of Danzig, declared its reunion with Hitler's Reich, accepted by Hitler, and dispatches from Gleiwitz reported the sound of artillery fire.

Although Hitler's "orders of the day" to his army did not mention a declaration of war, the German radio warned all foreigners in Poland they were in dangerous territory.

Reports reaching Warsaw said four Polish cities, including Krakow, Katowice, Tczew and Czestocohowa had been bombed by German airplanes early this morning. Warsaw itself was alarmed by air-raid sirens.

Fighting was reported to have broken out at Danzig.

Hitler's proclamation to the army read:

"Germans in Poland are victims of a bloody terror, driven from house and home.

"A series of border violations unbearable for a great power show that the Poles no longer are willing to respect the German border.

"To put an end to these insane incitations, nothing remains but for me to meet force with force from now on.

"The German army will conduct a fight for honor and the right to the life of the resurrected German people with firm determination."

"I expect that every soldier, mindful of the great traditions of the eternal German military, will do his duty to the last.

"Remember always that you are representatives of the National Socialist Great Germany. Long live our people and our Reich!"

Hitler gave his orders to his army at 5:30 a. m. (11:30 p. m., E. S. T., Thursday)

The command was issued as the order of the day to the army massed on Polish frontiers from the Baltic to the high Tatra Mountains, and in East Prussia.

No instruction was made public, however, for any action.

It was not known immediately whether Hitler had ordered the army to make an advance along the frontiers.

The radio announced immediately an indefinite closing of all schools in Germany.

Rapid fire orders followed commanding masters of German vessels to get out of the Baltic Sea and not to enter the Danzig or Polish harbors.

Two Cities on Same Harbor

The radio warned all foreigners that Polish territory is a danger zone and their presence was at their own peril because of the likelihood of military action.

Another order issued shortly before 6 a. m. prohibited all except military plane flights over Germany.

A moment later came the radio order declaring the Polish harbor of Gdynia blockaded by the German navy. Neutral vessels were warned to enter at their own peril because "military operations in this region are necessary."

Gdynia and Danzig are a few miles apart in the same harbor.

The government announcement said German warships would meet foreign vessels steaming into the danger zone and instruct them where to go.

Ships were warned to stay out of waters between 18 degrees 5 minutes (near the German-Polish border) and 20 degrees, east longitude.

Warlike orders from the war ministers to the German nation continued to pour forth.

East German communities were warned against possible attack by Polish planes. Most of Berlin was still asleep and the streets were quiet and many did not hear the instructions.

The order banning all but German military flights across Germany declared offending planes would be shot down.

Telephone communication with Danzig from Berlin was impossible.

Germans speculated on whether the Poles had cut the line across Pomorze (the Polish Corridor).

Hitler, the press was given to understand last night, will address the nation and the world today. The address possibly will be delivered

Roosevelt Reports Poland Invaded

By the Associated Press

President Roosevelt directed today that all Naval ships and Army commands be notified at once by radio of German-Polish hostilities.

The White House issued the following announcement:

"The President received word at 2:50 a. m., Eastern Standard Time, by telephone from Ambassador Biddle at Warsaw and through Ambassador Bullitt at Paris that Germany has invaded Poland and that [illegible] are being bombed.

"The President directed all naval ships and army commands be notified by radio at once.

"There probably will be a further announcement by the State Department in a few hours."

The announcement was issued by William Hassett, acting White House press secretary, after the President telephoned him at his home.

White House offices had been dark during the night, but Mr. Roosevelt himself was keeping in constant touch with European developments.

One factor of immediate concern was the presence of many Americans in Europe

There was speculation that naval vessels in European waters might be ordered to lend a hand to merchant ships in evacuating Americans.

Offensive Begun, London Hears

London, Sept. 1 (A.P.).—A Reuters dispatch from Paris said: "The following is given with all reserve: According to unconfirmed reports received here, the Germans have begun an offensive with extreme violence on the whole Polish front."

Poles Charge 4 Frontier Violations

Paris, Sept. 1 (A.P.).—Havas (French) News Agency said today that the Polish Embassy here had announced that "Germany violated the Polish frontier at four points."

"German reports of pretended violation of German territory by Poland are pure invention, as is the fable of 'attack' by Polish insurgents on Gleiwitz," the embassy said.

British Begin Evacuation Of 3,000,000 From London

Kingdom on Wartime Footing, Cabinet Due to Meet Today on Pledge to Poles; Telephones to U. S. Cut, Cables Censored

By the Associated Press

London, Sept. 1 (6:46 a. m.)—(Passed Through British Censorship).—Great Britain, standing on her pledge to fight for Poland's independence, received the news of Germany's latest moves in the European crisis with the deepest gravity today as the nation moved swiftly toward a full war footing.

An immediate cabinet meeting was expected to survey the implications both of Germany's eleventh-hour 16-point proposal to Poland and Hitler's early-morning order to the German army on the Polish border to "meet force with force."

Government offices, after a night marked by intense activity, were empty of officials authorized to speak when news of Hitler's instructions to the army was received. But this, together with the radio announcement of the Germany navy's blockade of Gdynia, created a stir among those on duty.

Attention was attracted particularly by the speed with which the army order and harbor blockade followed the German broadcast which listed Hitler's "16 points."

Meanwhile, with the British fleet mobilizing swiftly under the order issued yesterday and the entire army reserve called up, Britain began the evacuation of 3,000,000 women, children and infirm from the danger areas.

Suburban trains ran on skeleton schedules so that the rolling stock would be available to handle the exodus from London. Many of the London underground stations were closed except to those being evacuated.

London (Friday), Sept. 1.—Europe plunged headlong in the direction of war today.

Every major capital in Europe was mobilized; a rigid wartime censorship was clamped down; all first-aid stations in Britain were fully manned, cities were being frantically evacuated and in the highest diplomatic circles the view was expressed that war was imminent.

A high Polish diplomatic source said, however, that Poland was willing to negotiate with Germany in

Over the Coffee

Rehoboth Beach, Sept. 1.

WAR ON THE CAPITAL'S BEACH

This is the most peaceful scene of all, a beach dotted with children playing around a hundred colored umbrellas, digging canals and building sand castles and dikes.

Harlan Miller

Perhaps I shall not see it so peaceful again for a long, long time, for as I lie on the sand and scribble this, the war crisis still ebbs and flows in Hitler's unpredictable brain.

* * *

Over there stands Admiral Leahy on the sand, just ending four years in command of our Navy. His taciturn seadog's face yields a ghost of a smile as a lifeguard chases his grandchildren from the pounding surf of the ocean he has guarded. . . . Over toward the jetty Mahmoud Hassan Bey, the Egyptian Minister, has been teaching his small son to swim, very incognito in the spray.

* * *

It was from a beach like this 21 years ago up on Cape Cod that some holidaying parents and their tots watched a submarine bombard some small American ships. . . . War seemed a long way off for those tots in 1918, but they are eligible now . . . And these tots on Rehoboth Beach today will be eligible in 1959 if Hitler is right.

"—the Admiral's grandchildren"

There are a thousand beaches like this, in Italy and England and Germany, where youngsters are digging canals in the sand. I remember the flaxen-haired German tots on the beach at Zoppot on the Baltic in 1919, just outside Danzig.

Some of them are storm troopers in Danzig now. Maybe young Albert Forster, the Danzig fuehrer, was one of them.

Odd, how pictures of Frau Forster resemble the lovely little girl from nearby Marienburg who used to play on that beach in 1919 . . . (Over there is Col. Pinkie Harrington braving the surf; war won't be any tougher for him than his job of shrinking the WPA.)

Wonder what ever became of my friend Lieut. Fritz Karnath, of the XVII German Army Korps, with three bullets in his tough frame? He's too old now . . . And he had a brother in Peoria; wanted me to look him up.

* * *

Now that little vermillion airplane swoops low over the beach, too low, and all the young mothers say to each other, "What if that were a bombing plane?" . . . They're saying that also on beaches like this in Yugoslavia, across the narrow Adriatic from Italy; there's Fotitch, the Yugoslav Minister, standing there with the foamy water racing around his toes. These diplomats don't seem so austere in swimming trunks.

"—diplomats in swimming trunks"

But Allard, of the Canadian Legation, holds his dignity well in his swimming suit, though the heavy surf tumbles him about just as if he were a Yank. . . . With field-glasses from the top of the lifeguard's platform you can just see the top of the hangar at Cape May; but war seems farther away than that.

* * *

Some fathers in their middle thirties are kidding each other about their reserve corps commissions and their roles in the next war.

"It'll be like a holiday to me," says one.

"I wouldn't prevent you from doing your duty," retorts his wife tartly.

But the young lawyer from the SEC, just the right age for an infantry captain, isn't smiling so heartily.

Over there at the end of the beach, surrounded by the doggiest of beach paraphernalia, is Congressman Byron with his beauteous wife. . . . Someone says that he'd go to war in spite of his five children. . . . There's Prew Savoy, son-in-law of Senator Townsend, whom everyone takes for a diplomat, emerging from a big wave. . . .

Over yonder are a couple of retired colonels and Joe Green, of the Joint Munitions Board, perhaps the most warlike note of all in this peaceful scene.

Don Richberg, back from the oil wars in Mexico, has stopped to tell us about the time he knocked over a potted plant at the White House and the time his shirtstuds popped out at a White House dinner. . . . That little plane zooms overhead again; but war in 1939 seems incredible; I must go in and get wet again.

U. S. Awaits Europe Events To Fix Course

McKellar Advocates Special Session Call Before War Breaks

By Robert C. Albright

As the European situation keyed to new tension, Secretary Hull yesterday reiterated the desire of this Government to aid in any practical and feasible way to preserve world peace.

Reports that the President would fire another "shot for peace" remained unconfirmed at the White House, where Mr. Roosevelt has not received a reply to his two notes to Reichsfuehrer Hitler.

Secretary Hull said any further steps from this side of the Atlantic would depend on hour-to-hour developments, which are being watched closely.

Senator McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, urged an immediate call for a special session even before war appears "reasonably certain," to repeal the automatic arms embargo and to make this Government "a factor for peace."

Other observers believed the President would appeal again directly to bellicose nations if war seems inescapable. He has never addressed Britain or France. Some officials thought a reply from Hitler might serve as an instrument for a message to all governments involved.

At the White House, Federal Loan Administrator Jesse H. Jones discussed RFC credit aids to American industry in event of a war. He said much assistance may not be needed as large private credit resources could "do the job."

Jones later told newsmen that Warren Lee Pierson, president of the Export-Import Bank, is now in Europe studying possibilities for disposing of American surpluses. He said Pierson found interest everywhere in purchases here, but financing still offered obstacles.

Word that Pierson is now in Spain and leaving for Warsaw today started speculation on possible American financing of surplus foodstuffs sales to Poland, France and Britain if war breaks. The neutrality act arms embargo would stop shipment of munitions.

The Federal loan administrator told reporters that neither the Export-Import Bank nor the RFC would be prevented by the Johnson act, barring loans to debtor nations, from sharing with exporters in financing such sales. He said loans to foreign governments were not discussed with the President.

Predicting Congress would react to "the overwhelming sentiment of the American people," who, he said, are in favor of arms embargo repeal, McKellar declared the President's neutrality legislation should be passed "before any active hostilities begin."

"We should sell to all nations whatever supplies they want to buy and have the money to pay for and the ships in which to carry them away," said the Tennessee Democrat.

"Such a policy will make us the most powerful factor for world peace on the face of the earth. I abhor war and war-threateners, and war-makers. Apparently they are permanent fixtures in Europe today. Let us not help them by keeping on our statute books laws that give them aid and confidence."

McKellar said he is convinced a majority of the members of Congress who opposed neutrality act revision last session would favor Administration proposals today. He added:

"With the present neutrality act in force the United States is powerless to exert her proper and powerful influence for world peace. Germany does not even have to bother about us; Japan can ignore us at will. By reason of the present law, in world affairs our influence in the present crisis is about on a parity with any minor power. We cannot avoid our world responsibilities."

Late in the day, President Vincent of Haiti, added his felicitations to a previous note from Ecuador praising the President's peace appeals. President Vincent expressed Haiti's "complete devotion to the noble cause which you are defending with so much faith and energy in the higher interests of humanity and civilization. I confirm to Your Excellency my former precise declarations on the complete collaboration of my country in the work of defending peace by all the means in its power."

President Roosevelt promptly cabled his thanks, adding that Haiti's message "will encourage and hearten all of those who, joining with the people of the Americas, favor the settlement of international differences by peaceful means."

Jones said the RFC or the Export-Import Bank might supply 50 per cent or more of the necessary credit, while the American exporter supplied the remainder. He said such transactions in the past have been with private interests and no applications have been received from foreign governments.

Jones said exploratory studies are being made on financing similar surplus sales in South America, and that prospects appeared bright.

The Gallup Poll

Overwhelming Majority in U. S. Believes Hitler's Claims to Danzig Are 'Unjustified'

By Dr. George Gallup.
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

Princeton, N. J., Aug. 31.—Which nation is most "in the right" in the long-standing quarrel over Danzig and the Polish Corridor—Adolf Hitler's Third Reich or the war-born Republic of Poland?

GEORGE GALLUP

However future historians may answer that question, it can be recorded today that the people of the United States are overwhelmingly on the side of Poland and critical of the claims of Chancellor Hitler, according to a Nation-wide survey by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

Although the Free City of Danzig is predominantly German, and although the Polish Corridor itself was carved out of German territory within the memory of most living Americans, more than five persons in every six with opinions on the question say that Hitler's claims are "not justified."

To a cross-section of men and women in all parts of the country, so selected as to represent as perfectly as posssible the 45,000,000 electorate, the institute put the question:

"Do you think Hitler's claims to Danzig are justified:

A similar question was asked regarding the Polish Corridor.

The replies were:

Danzig:
Claims justified	13%
Claims not justified	87%
Polish Corridor:
Claims justified	14%
Claims not justified	86%

Interesting for purposes of comparison is the attitude taken by American voters just 11 months ago when Germany was demanding the return of the Sudetenland. Asked by institute interviewers whether they thought Chancellor Hitler's demands on the Czechs were justified, 23 per cent of those with opinions said "Yes."

That the number approving Hitler's demands against Poland is smaller today, is one more indication of the way American opinion has been alienated in a year's time.

From the voters' comments it is evident that many Americans do not make a sharp distinction between Hitler's claims and the manner in which he has presented those claims to Europe, however.

A businessman interviewed in New York summarized the views of a substantial majority of Americans when he said:

As long as Hitler offers his claims with one hand and the business-end of a revolver with the other, I'm against giving him anything."

In his note to Premier Daladier early this week, Chancellor Hitler claimed that he would be leading the German people "in a fight to rectify a wrong, whereas the others will be fighting to preserve that wrong."

The Institute's survey shows that all Hitler's denunciations of the Versailles Treaty have not convinced the American people that England, France and Poland should give in on the question of Danzig.

As a further question the Institute asked:

"Would you like to see England, France and Poland agree to Germany's demands regarding Danzig?"

"No," said 88 per cent of those with opinions. The remaining 12 per cent said they would like to see the Reich's demands met. Sectionally the greatest support for Hitler's position is found in the East, the least in the Midwest and West:

Murphy Announces FBI Is Extending Forces to Cope With Spies if War Comes

Attorney General Murphy yesterday said the Federal Bureau of Investigation was extending its forces to meet any spy situation which might arise in the event of war.

"We intend to see to it," he said, "that there shall be no repetition of the situation in 1917 of a democracy unprepared to take care of an espionage problem."

Miami, Fla., Aug. 31 (AP).—Representative Randolph, of West Virginia, advocated mandatory citizenship in an address before Jewish War Veterans, whose national convention ends today.

Rep. Randolph

He said there are between 4,000,000 and 5,000,000 aliens in the United States taking the benefits of government without accepting the responsibilities of citizenship. He would grant them one year to file a declaration of intention or face deportation.

Madison, Wis., Aug. 31 (AP).—Lieut. Gov. Walter S. Goodland and seven other prominent Wisconsin Republicans today threw their support behind Senator Vandenberg, of Michigan, for the Republican Presidential nomination next year.

The group called upon other Republicans to meet next Wednesday night in Milwaukee to create a voluntary organization and arrange plans for the national convention.

Reporters in the State Department press room got set for a big news story yesterday when an official announced that President Roosevelt had sent a message to Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands.

The conclusion immediately jumped at was that the President had adhered to the move for peace and mediation advanced by the Dutch Queen and the King of Belgium.

However, the message turned out to be one of congratulation upon the Queen's birthday anniversary and read:

"To the messages of felicitation which are being conveyed to Your Majesty upon this anniversary, permit me to add my sincere congratulations and best wishes for Your Majesty's personal welfare and the peace and prosperity of the people of the Netherlands."

Liberties Union Protests Subpena To Steel Company

By the Associated Press

The American Civil Liberties Union protested yesterday against what it said was an attempt by the Monopoly Committee to inquire into the political, social and economic views of officers of Jones & Laughlin Steel Corporation.

In a letter to Chairman O'Mahoney (Democrat) of Wyoming, of the committee, the union asked withdrawal of a committee subpena directing the steel corporation to produce all its correspondence, telegrams and memoranda reflecting the policies, activities and views of the corporation with respect to anti-trust laws.

"The political, social or economic views of persons or corporations are matters which should be of no concern to the Government," the letter said.

Nazis Reported Giving Half of Time to Guns

Productive Capacity Of Reich Said to Be Far Below America's

By the Associated Press

American military experts said yesterday they had been informed that Germany was devoting 50 per cent of its productive capacity to military purposes.

German economy collapsed when the amount of productive capacity devoted to such purposes reached 65 per cent near the end of the World War, they added.

The large proportion of productive power which the Reich is now using to turn out munitions and support the army explains in large measure, the experts said, why Germany, even before the outbreak of a possible European conflict, has begun limiting the amount of food individual citizens may purchase.

U. S. Capacity Greatest

Reduction of the standard of living is inevitable when a great amount of a nation's productive ability goes into nonproductive war machines, it was pointed out.

The United States has the greatest productive capacity in the world, far greater than Germany's, the military men said, but eventually the average civilian would find automobiles hard to get, food and clothing supplies limited, transportation facilities reduced and housing impaired.

Comparing the reported use of productive capacity in Germany with that now prevailing in the United States, the experts said the American Congress apropriated $1,783,187,847 for national defense in the fiscal year which began July 1 this year.

Incomes Compared

This is, obviously, far less than 50 percent of this country's national income, which the Commerce Department says reached $64,000,000,000 in 1938. German income in 1937, the last year for which figures are obtainable, was recorded at $28,531,000,000. French income for the same year has been estimated by private economists at $9,300,000,000 to $9,700,000, and the latest estimate available here as to income in the United Kingdom is $19,102,000,000 for 1935.

Britain Firmer Than in 1914, Says Lothian

Ambassador Asserts He's 'Betting on Peace' And Will Until End

By Hedley Donovan.

Unity of opinion and purpose is firmer in Great Britain today than in August, 1914, the Marquess of Lothian asserted yesterday at his first press conference in the British Embassy.

"I have never seen the British public more unified nor the three political parties more at one," said Britain's new envoy to the United States.

Lord Lothian, seated in a wicker chair on the embassy's Georgian portico, faced 40 reporters and a battery of cameramen with nonchalance. He wore a summer-weight sack suit, hard collar and silk tie. "I started out as a press man myself," he told the group.

"Betting on Peace"

The diplomat began the conference by ruling out questions on the status of current negotiations between London, Berlin and Paris, but later said he is "still betting on peace." He added, however, that he intended to "go on betting on peace until the end."

Great Britain recognizes that treaties, boundaries, and economic arrangements must be revised from time to time, he said, but is determined revision shall not take place "under force or threat of force."

Disarmament and "an atmosphere of security" are indispensable conditions for any treaty modification, he declared, while Europe's present course leads only to the "junk heap."

Praises British Arms

Britain's attitude dates from "what happened in Prague six months ago," Lord Lothian indicated. He said the past year has seen "remarkable achievement" in British rearmament, an "enormous expansion" of the air force and voluntary enrollment of 2,000,000 for defense duties.

The United Kingdom's immediate economic position is "very good," he said, with a labor shortage anticipated this fall as a result of intensive defense measures. He pointed out that Britain has been obliged to embark on deficit financing, "a practice, I understand, not wholly unknown here."

No Orders on War Debt

Lord Lothian said he had received no special instructions on the British war debt to America, "though naturally no one would be happier than I if the question could be settled while I'm here."

Application of the American neutrality act, in the event of war, "obviously would make a difference to England," if it means arms already ordered could not be delivered, the Ambassador said.

The envoy saw no particular cause for alarm in yesterday's severance of telephone communication between England and the continent, a step which he called a normal precaution in view of "mobilization elsewhere."

After the conference Lord Lothian read before movie cameras a prepared statement expressing the "deep appreciation" of King George and Queen Elizabeth for American hospitality during the recent royal visit.

Bridges, Lawyers Called Communist

San Francisco, Aug. 31 (AP).—A Government witness testified today Harry Bridges was a Communist and his three attorneys in his deportation hearings also were members of the party.

The witness, Miles Humphreys, who said he was expelled from the party at Oakland, Calif., in 1937, asserted he had attended "20 or 30" Communist meetings with Bridges, West Coast maritime leader.

Later he made the calm assertion: "Bridges and his entire defense are Communist Party members."

Bridges chuckled and his attorneys, Miss Carol King, of New York; Aubrey Crossman and Richard Gladstein, smiled. They did not interpose objections.

Pilsudski's Widow Digs a Trench

Hitler's 16 Points

Berlin, Aug. 31.—Following are Germany's 16 points proposed for settlement of the European crisis:

1. Danzig returns immediately to Germany.

2. The Polish Corridor running from Marienwerder to Grudziasz, Kulm and Bydgoszcz is to be subject to a plebiscite to determine to whom it belongs.

3. Eligible to take part in the plebiscite under an international commission are all Germans, Poles and others who resided in the Corridor on January 1, 1918. The commission is to be composed of Italians, Soviet Russians, French and English. All Polish soldiers and police to be withdrawn.

4. Gdynia is exempted from the plebiscite and remains Polish.

5. To allow ample time for a just plebiscite, this shall take place within 12 months.

6. During the period when the international commission has control of the Corridor, Germany is assured of free communication to East Prussia by railway and an auto road.

7. A simple majority will decide the fate in the plebiscite.

8. In case the Corridor is voted to Poland, Germany will be granted an extraterritorial zone for an auto road and railway one kilometer (about five-eighths of a mile) wide. If voted to Germany, similar privileges for Poland will be granted to Gdynia.

9. Germany is ready to effect an exchange of populations—resettling—in case the Corridor is awarded to Germany.

10. Germany shall enjoy the same economic rights in Gydnia as the Poles in Danzig.

11. To eliminate bad feeling, both Danzig and Gydnia are to be purely trade centers, hence demilitarized.

12. Whichever way the peninsula of Hel goes, it is in any case to be demilitarized.

13. Complaints about the treatment of minorities by both countries are to be submitted to an international commission of investigation. All damages inflicted since 1918 must be repaired and all dispossessions of property revoked.

14. Neither country shall expect of the minority of the other that it render services incompatible with national honor. Hence Germans will not ask military service of the Polish minority nor Poles of the German minority.

15. In case these proposals are acceptable, both sides are to demobilize at once.

16. Further measures necessary will be arrived at by negotiation.

U. S. to Defer Borrowing if Crisis Keeps Up

September 15 Loan Is Held Inadvisable By Treasury Official

The Government probably will borrow no money September 15, as it had planned to do, unless the war tension is eased perceptibly within the next week, it was learned yesterday.

A high Administration official expressed the belief that the Treasury should undertake no financing as long as the present situation lasts.

The Treasury's $1,615,193,881 working balance, together with funds which it will borrow from the social security and other trust accounts and through "baby bond" sales, will take care of the Government's mounting deficit until December 15, the last 1939 income tax date.

Plans Before Crisis

Before the "war of nerves" began, Treasury officials mapped out a tentative financing program under which about $500,000,000 of new cash would be borrowed and a $526,232,500 issue of 1⅜ per cent notes maturing December 15 would be refunded.

With the money market, like other markets, more or less jumpy because of the war tension, however, the Treasury probably will not even attempt to refund the December note maturity unless definite improvement occurs.

If so, it will be the first time in more than a year that the Treasury has failed to anticipate, on an income tax date, any note maturity which happened to fall due on the succeeding income tax date.

Meeting Called for Today

Although the Treaasury does not have to borrow money now, it will have to prepare a huge financing program for December 15 if it does not go through with its September 15 plans.

Acting Secretary of the Treasury John W. Hanes and other Treasury officials will meet today with the executive committee of the Federal Reserve Open Market Committee to decide what course to follow September 15.

It Isn't Skunks But Attitude of People, Says U. S.

Thousands of caustic cracks about skunks are really nothing but manufactured "atrocity" stories, it developed yesterday.

It isn't the skunks, but the attitude of the public, wildlife technicians of the National Park Service said.

"Allay the fears of the visitors regarding these harmless and interesting mammals," the park experts advised. "Educate the people to become better acquainted with skunks, at least on paper, and in time the prejudice that has so long prevented the skunk from enjoying friendly relations with visitors to the country will be overcome."

U. S. Seeks Chief Budget Examiner

The Federal Government wants a chief budget examiner—and will pay him $6,500 a year. A principal budget examiner at $5,600 also will be sought.

The Civil Service Commission yesterday announced examinations for the two important posts, the employment to be in the executive office of the President, Bureau of the Budget. Applicants must not have passed their fifty-fifth birthday. September 12 is the closing date on applications.

Navy Awards Alaskan Air Base Contracts

Aviation Centers At Kodiak, Sitka to At $12,739,000

The Navy pushed its defense program yesterday by awarding a $12,739,000 contract for construction of air bases at Kodiak Island and Sitka, Alaska.

Nine bids, the Navy Department announced, have been opened for construction of foundations for the new central office and drafting building at the Navy Yard here. Lowest bids were presented by Ross Engineering Co., 3308 Fourteenth street northwest, $53,477; Harwood-Nebel Construction Co., 1520 K street northwest, $57,600, and Sweetman & Hall, 2539 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, $64,940.

A contract for an intake tunnel at the Navy Yard was awarded to Victor Constructors, Inc., on its low bid of $74,895. The work is to be completed within 120 days.

The Alaska bases will be built on the basis of a fixed fee plus adjustment for variation in cost, as a joint venture by the Siems Spokane Co., Spokane; Johnson, Drake & Piper, Inc., Minneapolis, and Puget Sound Bridge & Dredging Co., Seattle.

Oregon Base Work Starts

Astoria, Oreg., Aug. 31 (AP).—Work started today on the million and a half dollar Tongue Point naval base, 39 years after it was proposed by a Navy commission.

The Navy plans to maintain a base for submarines and aircraft as a unit in the system of Pacific Coast defenses.

2 Naval Fliers Killed in Crash Near Stony Creek

Two naval fliers were killed yesterday when their scout bomber crashed and burned in a swamp near Stony Creek, Va.

The Navy Department believed the dead to be Ensign James H. Eoff, U. S. Naval Reserve, and Radioman (First Class), Joseph T. George, both attached to the aircraft carrier Ranger.

Witnesses reported they saw a man climb out on the plane's wing before it fell, but cause of the crash had not been determined late yesterday.

Eoff, a native of Arkansas, attended the University of Oklahoma before receiving aviation training at the naval station, Pensacola, Fla.

George enlisted in the Navy in 1937. He leaves his father, Thomas George, of Uniontown, Pa.

New Battalion For Fort Belvoir

A Leopard can change its spots!

Did you know that a fawn colored, spotted leopard can change into a pitch-black panther? Science calls it "Melanism". But it is almost magic! "The spots of a leopard," explains Captain White, "hide it in the tall, sunlit jungle grass. But because some leopards prowl in the darkness of the deep forest, nature protects them through generations, by changing their spots. It is absolutely true that a leopard and a black panther are blood brothers."

A leopard may change its spots, but White Horse is always the same! Because so many million people, in so many million places want White Horse just as it is: perfect in taste, supreme in quality, and uniform in excellence. A long, cool drink of White Horse is first for summer thirst! Taste White Horse today. President Fixes U. S. Attitude On Armed Ships

Acts to Avert Such Quarrel as One That Plagued Lansing

By Andrue Berding
Associated Press Staff Writer

President Roosevelt has leaped across two years of World War diplomatic controversy and in a sweeping decision before war begins, has laid down the United States policy toward armed merchantmen of belligerent nations.

He told his press conference Tuesday that if belligerent ships carry purely defensive armament against enemy submarines we will allow them into and out of our ports, but they must prove that the arms are defensive.

The importance of this decision may be seen in the fact that Secretary of State Robert Lansing carried on a two-year diplomatic dispute with Great Britain and Germany over this question, at one point reversing himself and then having to reverse his reversal, before the issue could be settled.

After President Roosevelt's statement, if war comes there will be no doubt whatever where the Administration stands with regard to armed merchantmen. The difficulties and intricacies of the problem the President has laid at rest in his own mind are illustrated by what happened when the World War began.

The first diplomatic exchanges on the subject started in August, 1914, when the British government called this Government's attention to the fact that a number of British merchant vessels would be entering United States waters armed. The arms were described as "a precautionary measure adopted solely for the purpose of defense, which under existing rules of international law is the right of all merchant vessels when attacked."

Later in the month the British government gave "fullest assurances that British merchant vessels will never be used for purposes of attack, that they are merely peaceful traders armed only for defense, that they will never fire unless fired upon, and that they will never under any circumstances attack any vessel."

Lansing Established Rules

However, the German Ambassador protested that the British liner Adriatic had entered New York harbor armed with cannon and had not left within 24 hours as is required of belligerent warships. But the State Department decided in favor of Great Britain, ruled the Adriatic was a merchantman, not a warship, and allowed her clearance.

The next month the British government presented the State Department a memorandum justifying its action in arming merchantmen, stating that this was an ancient British practice, and that the right to arm and resist capture had been asserted by the British and American prize courts.

In September, Secretary Lansing issued a circular letter which set forth norms for determining whether the armanent of a belligerent merchant vessel was for defensive purposes or not.

Since some of these rules may be used at the present time in pursuance of President Roosevelt's statement that the merchantmen have got to prove their arms are defensive, it might be well to recall them. Lansing's dicta were:

That the caliber of the guns does not exceed 6 inches; that the guns and small arms are few in number; that no guns are mounted forward; that the quantity of ammunition is small; that the vessel is manned by its usual crew and the officers are the same as before war was declared; that the vessel continues in its usual route; that it takes on fuel and supplies sufficient only to carry it to its port of destination; that its cargo is unsuited for the use of a warship in operations against an enemy; that it carries passengers as a whole unfitted for military service, particularly women and children; that its speed is slow.

The first American rulings had in mind armed merchantmen versus surface raiders. When the submarine emerged as an ubiquitous weapon, the State Department began to have serious doubts as to the justice of its ruling regarding the defensive character of a merchantman's guns.

Under the ordinary rules of war, a submarine should come to the surface, warn the merchantman to stop, and give the passengers and crew time to get off the ship before firing the fatal torpedo. But if the merchantman were armed, the submarine did not dare adopt this procedure, because one shot from a small calibre cannon on the merchantman might sink the submarine, which from a defensive viewpoint is a helpless shell.

Lansing notified the Italian Ambassador in December, 1915: "The situation has been changed by the use of submarines as commerce destroyers, and for that reason this Government feels that these (September, 1914) rules should be modified, as a small caliber gun on a merchant ship is just as effective for purposes of attack against the submarine as the large caliber gun. Therefore, the presence of any gun on a merchant ship of a belligerent nationality could well create the presumption that the armament was for offensive purposes, thereby causing this Government to treat the ship as a ship of war."

Finally Lansing proposed to the allied governments in January, 1916, "that merchant vessels of belligerent nationality should be prohibited and prevented from carrying any armament whatsoever." He expressed the hope that the allied governments would place more emphasis on saving the lives of innocent persons than on a "doubtful legal right which may be denied on account of the new conditions."

Order Was Reversed

The Lansing proposal struck consternation into the allies. American Ambassador Page in London said of the British Foreign Secretary Grey: "His surprise and dismay are overwhelming."

Page said, "If this proposal be persisted in, the Administration will forfeit the confidence and good will of England and France."

Col. House, President Wilson's adviser, hastened back from Europe and brought all the pressure he could to bear upon the President. Finally, in March, 1916, the State Department about-faced. It issued a new announcement requiring a belligerent warship, in the absence of "conclusive evidence of aggressive purpose," to act on the assumption that an armed merchantman is of "private and peaceful" character and cannot be attacked without regard to the lives of persons on board.

It is here President Roosevelt takes up if war comes again. The right of Great Britain and France to arm their merchantmen and send them to and from our ports is admitted in advance. There will be no diplomatic exchanges of the type that marked the years 1914-1916. But there is one sharp difference between then and now. Americans will be kept off these armed merchantmen of belligerents by virtue of a provision in the neutrality act with which President Roosevelt has expressed himself in sympathy.

Nazis Report Border Fights

Say 7 Men Died to Defend Radio Station, One Clash 'Going On'

By the Associated Press.

Berlin (Friday), Sept. 1.—Deutches Nachrichten Buero, the German official news agency, this morning reported numerous border battles between German border police and "Polish insurgents," in addition to an alleged attack on the German radio station at Gleiwitz, in Silesia, in which seven persons were listed as killed.

These reports were unconfirmed by any other source.

In Warsaw it was charged the Gleiwitz incident was manufactured by the German propaganda machine as part of a deliberate program designed to convince the world that Poland is guilty of aggression.—Editor's note.]

At Pitschen, Upper Silesia, the agency said, two Poles and one German were killed and many wounded in a battle between a detachment of German border police and more than 200 Poles. Fifteen Poles were captured in the encounter, said the agency.

[The United Press confirmed that fighting was going on at Pitschen.—Editor's note.]

In another fight at Hochlinden where, the agency said, "Polish insurgents" and soldiers stormed the customs house, the total of dead and injured still was undetermined. Six Polish soldiers were captured. The German border police recaptured the building after half an hour's fighting.

D. N. B. further reported from Marienwerder, that Polish bands, supported by regular Polish soldiers, attacked the railway station at Alt Eiche, in West Prussia.

German guards responded with machine gun fire, the agency reported, and one German was killed and another wounded. The Poles retreated with an unknown number of dead and wounded, the agency continued.

These battles were reported going on at about the same time that the news agency said, "Polish insurgents" invaded the Gleiwitz radio station. Reports of the number of dead at Gleiwitz varied. Berlin Nazis said they understood seven had been killed, while a police report said one Pole had been killed.

Jews "wait in full preparedness" to do their part in defense of the nation.

Civilian preparedness kept pace. All policemen and mail carriers in the larger cities were equipped with gas masks. There was an increase in evacuation of civilians from the frontier areas. Thousands of women and children left Warsaw for country areas.

Radio broadcasts announced that Warsaw would be blacked out nightly from now on.

The press said that there was still a thin chance for peace but on the whole was pessimistic.

Refugees Ordered Home, N. Y. Hears

New York, Aug. 31 (INS).—The German government has commanded the return of German-Jewish refugees for mobilization in the army in case of war, according to an article published tonight in The Hour, news bulletin of the American Council Against Nazi Propaganda.

Even Jews holding first naturalization papers in the United States have been ordered to report to the nearest German consulate, The Hour said.

The publication attached a photostatic copy of what it said was the mobilization document.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Observers believe the allies and the axis powers would fight it out this way in the event of war. The axis is given an outside chance of offsetting allied naval strength if it could produce an effective aerial bombardment of the allied battle fleets. Maginot and Siegfried lines would be expected to stalemate each other. Experts say Polish resistance on the east would likely take the attention of half the German forces for six months or more. Invasion of northern Italy, by France and Britain, according to the observers, would draw Germans away from the eastern and western fronts

Russian Due to Make Military Alliance Today, Berlin Says

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Aug. 31.—Informed sources said tonight a Soviet military mission would arrive in Berlin tomorrow to conclude a military alliance, following up the nonaggression pact which both governments ratified today.

There was no immediate confirmation of the reported plan for an alliance, which would place Poland between two of the most powerful armies in the world.

[An International News Service dispatch from London said it had been announced in Berlin that the Soviet military commission would arrive tomorrow, but this dispatch did not mention the reported alliance project.—Editor's note.]

Moscow, Aug. 31 (AP) (Passed through British censorship).—The Soviet-German pact of nonaggression was unanimously ratified at 8:47 p. m. (1:47 p. m., Eastern standard time) tonight by the Russian Parliament.

Earlier both houses of the supreme Soviet adopted unanimously a new and tighter conscription law which War Commissar Marshal K. E. Voroshiloff declared would show Russia's enemies that "we shall not be caught unawares."

The bill extends some terms of service, lowers conscript ages for high school graduates and provides for wartime mobilization of women trained in medicine and communication technique.

The ratification vote was taken after Premier and Foreign Minister Molotoff had explained the reasons which caused Josef Stalin to reverse the whole trend of his foreign policy.

As usual, the Soviet premier brought in a reference to Japan. In pointing to the fact that the international situation "has shown no change for the better" since the third session of the Soviet Parliament, he said, "Japanese troops continue to occupy the principal cities and a considerable part of the territory of China. Nor is Japan refraining from hostile acts against the U. S. S. R."

After describing increased "aggravation" of European and Asiatic tension, Motoloff said the pact has eliminated "the danger of war between Germany and the Soviet Union."

Four months of Anglo-French-Soviet negotiations for a mutual assistance pact, he continued, made it clear to Britain and France "that the Soviet Union has to be reckoned with in international affairs."

The negotiations encountered "insuperable obstacles," he said, principally that Poland rejected military assistance from the U. S. S. R.

"Attempts to overcome the objections of Poland met with no success," Molotoff related. "Negotiations showed that Great Britain was not anxious to overcome these objections of Poland but, on the contrary, encouraged them."

Thereafter, Molotoff asserted, "it became clear to us that the Anglo-French-Soviet negotiations were doomed to failure."

The position of Britain and France, he said, is marked by "howling contradictions," primarily that the two countries, while fearing aggression and therefore desiring a nonaggression pact with Russia, also feared "that conclusion of a real pact of mutual assistance with the U. S. S. R. might strengthen" the Soviet Union.

The new Red army law, observers believed, will add at least 500,000 men to Stalin's armed forces.

Voroshiloff said the new universal service law extends period of military service from two years to three years for all noncommissioned officers of the army and all border guards and airmen.

Italy Divided In 2 Commands By Her Army

Prince Umberto and Marshal Graziani Share Authority

By the Associated Press

Rome, Aug. 31.—Premier Mussolini today divided Italy into two military commands.

Fascist authorities said further mobilization by Poland and Britain and the closing of the Polish Corridor had heightened the crisis. There was a widespread feeling that the question whether there would be war would be answered by next Sunday.

Mussolini assigned Crown Prince Umberto to command one half of the metropolitan (nome) forces which include those in African Libya. He placed Marshal Rodolfo Graziani, veteran of the Ethiopian conquest, in command of the rest of the troops. It is believed Graziani would conduct any war along the northern Italian frontier.

The Albanian army is a separate command with an estimated strength of 100,000.

Services of the railroad and provincial motor buses and coastal and light steamship lines were curtailed 50 per cent, with oil and gasoline operated trains replaced by steam trains.

Italy today ended her exports to countries operating on a free currency basis, such as the United States, except for cash in advance. An exception was made for perishable fruits and flowers.

Army Masses 30 Planes For Flight to Panama

San Antonio, Tex., Aug. 31 (AP).—Thirty of the Army's fast P-36 pursuit planes from Selfridge Field, Mich.; Langley Field, Va., and Barksdale Field, La., are being concentrated at Duncan Field here for a flight to Panama to strengthen air defenses of the Canal Zone, it was learned today. Time of departure from here has not been set.

French Review Hitler Terms, Reassure Poles

Reject Any Mediation Forcing Change in Pact With Warsaw

Paris, Aug. 31 (AP).—Germany's demands for a settlement, providing for the return of Danzig and the holding of a plebiscite in the Corridor, were made public in Paris tonight without immediate official comment.

The nature of the demands and the tone of the German press communique heightened the general feeling that the moment remains critical. A reported Italian proposal for a six-power peace conference had earlier buoyed up hopes in some quarters.

An attache of the Polish Embassy termed the demands "impossible."

The French cabinet, meanwhile, had met with President Lebrun and unanimously voted to maintain the full support of Poland.

Situation Talked Over

Immediately after leaving the president's office in the Elysee Palace tonight Premier Daladier went into conference with Foreign Minister Bonnet, Finance Minister Reynaud and Navy Minister Campinchi.

Whether the ministers discussed the reported Italian conference proposal during the two-and-a-half hour cabinet meeting could not be ascertained.

A communique issued later said merely that the situation had been talked over and that the cabinet had unanimously approved continued support for Poland.

[The United Press said the council of ministers decided to reject all offers of mediation which might force revision of France's pledge to Poland, it was understood. The action of the council, composed of the cabinet and the President, was believed to have been taken as a direct result of the eleventh-hour emergence of Premier Mussolini of Italy as a possible mediator in the Polish-German dispute.—Editor's note.]

A brief communique issued after the meeting said merely that Premier Daladier and Foreign Minister Bonnett had given the ministers a "detailed" explanation of the international situation.

Firm on Keeping Promises

The ministers' communique concluded firmly and expressed unanimous agreement that France's promises to back Poland must be kept.

The cabinet began its meeting at 6 p. m. (noon E. S. T.) with President Lebrun only three hours after Daladier had conferred with British Ambassador Phipps.

Premier Daladier, before suddenly summoning the cabinet meeting, had another talk with Generalissimo Maurice Gustave Gamelin, chief of all French defense forces.

The evacuation of school children from Paris continued during the day the most complete blackout the city has had at any time during the crisis was ordered, beginning tonight.

Refugees Pass Through

Women and children who had been evacuated from northeastern cities such as Metz and Strasbourg began coming through Paris en route to more southerly points.

A new and pressing appeal was issued by the government for the populace to quit the capital itself.

Shortly before dispatches from Moscow announced the unanimous ratification by the Supreme Soviet of the Russo-German nonaggression pact, the headquarters of the Communist Party in Paris was visited by a squad of police agents. There were 40 arrests during the day on charges of distributing Communist propaganda.

The Communist Party, during the course of the day, had suffered another severe blow in the loss of the French Metal Workers Union, which has half a million members. The union severed its connections with the party because of dissatisfaction over the Russo-German pact.

During the first hour of the cabinet meeting a rumor circulated widely in Parliamentary circles that the ministers had been called to consider a British-Italian proposal for a six-power peace conference. The date mentioned was September 5, next Tuesday.

France, England, Poland, Germany, Italy and an undisclosed power were said to have been included among the conferees.

Pope, Duce Said to Be Co-operating,

Diplomatic circles linked the report with two conferences in Berlin this morning between the British and Italian Ambassadors there and two calls the French Ambassador in Rome made on Italian Foreign Minister Ciano.

It was linked also to an interview late this afternoon among the Italian and British Ambassadors to Belgium and the Belgian foregin minister.

Pope Pius XII and Premier Mussolini were said to be co-operating closely in an effort to find a peaceful solution to the crisis.

Paris Blacked Out

While the French government drove swiftly ahead with its preparations for war, by decreeing that Paris henceforth must be blacked out, the diplomatic lines for peace negotiations were kept open, awaiting the next move by Germany's Fuehrer.

Across the Rhine, however, French sources said, the German army was already on a wartime footing.

Through the Paris police an order was issued putting into execution the strict blackout laws already published.

any one of three ways.

They are:

Through the German Ambassador to Poland and Foreign Minister Beck in Warsaw.

Through the Polish Ambassador in Berlin and Fuehrer Hitler and Foreign Minister von Ribbentrop in Berlin.

Or conduct the negotiations in some neutral place, such as Stockholm or The Hague.

Balk at Sending Beck

The Poles are not agreeable to sending Beck to Berlin.

High Polish circles in London asserted that the first time they heard of Hitler's "16 points" was in the radio broadcast from Berlin tonight.

The British government also had not heard of these "sixteen points" until tonight's broadcast. Nor has the British government yet received a reply to Prime Minister Chamberlain's last note to Hitler.

Polish quarters here, after a first review of the "sixteen points," said they "appear unacceptable" to Poland.

[An early meeting of the British cabinet to consider Germany's 16-point proposal for negotiations is probable, an authoritative source said this morning, the Associated Press reported.

[While a number of foreign office officials met in a hurried midnight conference, it was learned authoritatively that the British position is that the proposals broadcast from Germany last night "are not a reply to any British proposals" and that the 16 points reached Poland last night for the first time.

[Official sources said Germany still has given no answer of any kind to the British note asking for clarification of points in a previous communication from Hitler.

[Speaking privately a British informant said he thought Hitler's radio bombshell meant one of two things:

[An attempt to show the world Hitler had made a magnanimous offer which the Poles had rejected and that now he must act against Poland.

[An effort to confuse the issues with a view toward further negotiation.

German Laments Poles' Attitude

[A German spokesman here said: ["There is no time limit for acceptance of the 16 points and they are not a demand; they are merely a basis of negotiation and nothing more. But the attitude of the Poles in not sending a delegation to Berlin amounts to a practical refusal to negotiate. The matter still is left open; but if they do not come very soon, we will say, 'All right, we have made our proposals and you have rejected them.' Then I do not know what will happen."

[The proposals were read to Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador in Berlin, late on the night of August 30 (Wednesday). They were not communicated to him officially, it was said here, on the ground that it was too late for his official cognizance. In the German communication dated August 29, midnight of August 30 had been set as the deadline for the arrival of a Polish representative, who had not arrived at that time.

[Authoritative British sources said they were at a loss to know whether Hitler's 16-point proposals to Poland still offered a basis for negotiation because they "never have been communicated officially to anybody."

[It was insisted upon that these proposals had been communicated to Poland for the first time last night (Thursday)—presumably by the medium of the German radio.—Editor's note.]

Fleet Mobilized, Phones Cut Off

3,000,000 persons from the cities by Monday; prohibited excessive purchases of food and complete distribution of gas masks to the civilian population. Russia suddenly entered the picture with announcement in Berlin that a Soviet military commission would arrive in the German capital tomorrow; Moscow and Berlin simultaneously ratified the Nazi-Soviet nonaggression treaty.

Josef Lipski, Polish Ambassador to the Reich, called at the foreign office in Berlin, either to bid farewell or perhaps pave the way for "zero hour" negotiations. Sir Nevile Henderson, the British Ambassador, also called at the foreign office.

Premier Mussolini submitted a last-minute peace plan which was taken under immediate advisement by the council of ministers in Paris.

Diplomatic negotiations between Britain and Germany were suspended.

The covered trenches and public bomb shelters in London were ordered opened for instant use.

Shortly before 8 p. m. (2 p. m. E.S.T.) yesterday it was stated at the foreign office that Sir Horace Kennard, British ambassador to Poland, expected a Polish communication "of utmost importance" within a day or two. Meanwhile, an expected new message from Hitler had not been received by Britain.

Great Britain has decreed virtual complete mobilization by raising all armed forces to wartime status. An official communique from No. 10 Downing street declared:

"In continuance of measures already adopted, it has been decided to complete naval mobilization and call up the remainder of the regular army service and the supplementary reserve. A further number of the royal air force volunteer reserve will also be called up.

"Officers and men should await further instruction, which will be made public immediately by each service department."

The new mobilization moves followed only by a few hours evacuation orders and announcement the London Stock Exchange would not open tomorrow. The evacuation provides for the movement of 1,300,000 persons from London alone. A total of 3,000,000 will be evacuated from the large cities, more than half of these being school children.

It was announced that certain hospitals in the London region also would be evacuated beginning tomorrow. Evacuation began tonight in certain urban areas in Scotland.

The mass evacuation from London will begin at 8 a. m. today, and from 8 a. m. until 5 p. m. the major portion of transport facilities will be given over to taking women and children, ill and aged, to the comparative safety of the countryside. Similar arrangements will prevail for the ensuing three or four days.

Seventy-two London subway, railway and suburban depots will be virtually given over to the evacuation, and the general public was asked not to use transport facilities during the evacuation hours unless absolutely necessary.

An official spokesman declared: "The government feels assured that the attitude of quiet confidence among the public will continue, and that the public will continue to put aside all personal interests and do everything to contribute to the success of this great national undertaking."

King Sees Halifax

United States Ambassador Kennedy was in close touch with the foreign office throughout the day and night, and was kept minutely informed of the ominous developments.

Foreign Minister Halifax conferred for an hour this evening with King George VI at Buckingham Palace, after which he returned direct to No. 10 Downing street. Halifax was accompanied by Sir Alexander Cadogan, permanent undersecretary for foreign affairs.

Throughout the day and night the foreign office was the scene of the greatest diplomatic activity. Among the callers during the last few hours were Charles Corbin, French Ambassador, and Virgila Tilea, Rumanian envoy.

Air raid precaution (ARP) authorities were granted authorization to requisition private premises for civil defense purposes, and construction of further public shelters, trench-digging and sand-bagging of buildings was ordered to speed up on a full, 24-hour basis.

Auxiliary fire services were ordered to stand by on 24-hour duty.

An order was issued that vehicles which are required but cannot be obtained through voluntary arrangements henceforth may be requisitioned by the ministry of transport.

The ARP communication control system based on a regional plan to provide advance warning of possible air raiders, was ordered to begin functioning immediately.

Depots for distribution of gas masks remained open all night in order to complete furnishing of all civilians with masks.

Pope Pleads With 5 Powers To Keep Peace

Vatican Gives Notes To Their Envoys, Called to Palace

By the Associated Press

Vatican City, Aug. 31.—Notes from Pope Pius XII were handed today to the British, French, Italian, German and Polish envoys to the Holy See and a Vatican informant said they contained appeals for a new effort to save Europe from war.

This action apparently had been decided upon only this morning, after the Pope had received latest reports on the international situation.

He summoned his secretary of state, Luigi Cardinal Maglione, to Castel Gandolfo for an extraordinary audience.

On his return to the Vatican from the Pope's summer palace, Cardinal Maglione asked the envoys of the five European powers principally concerned in the German-Polish quarrel to call.

To each he handed a document which, a Vatican informant said, contained "new and still more pressing insistence and prayers of the Pope that the existing tense situation be settled by peaceful means."

Vatican circles did not conceal their fears that war might be imminent. Throughout today the heads of almost all missions accredited to the Holy See called.

'Meet Force With Force,' Hitler Orders

Nazis Blockade Poland's Port in Swift Movement

in a special session of the Reichstag.

[International News Service said it was announced Hitler has summoned the Reichstag into emergency session at 10 o'clock this morning (4 a. m. E. S. T.).—Editor's note.]

The German government last night published a 16-point proposal made to the Polish government for settlement of their differences and which, in the German view, Poland has "rejected."

[Reliable diplomatic sources in Rome said two last-minute offers of Hitler through Italy had been turned down by Britain, France and Poland.

[The final offer was for return of Danzig and negotiations on all other matters, these sources said.

[The British response was that Britain would administer Danzig during the negotiation period.—Editor's note.]

The proposals provided for immediate return of Danzig to Germany, a plebiscite in the Polish-Corridor under direction of an international commission, an exchange of populations in case the Corridor should be awarded Germany, demilitarization of both Danzig and the Polish port of Gdynia, and, in event of acceptance of the proposals, immediate demobilization by both Germany and Poland.

According to the correspondence divulged last night, Germany, at Britain's request, declared her willingness to enter direct negotiations with Poland and asking that a Polish plenipotentiary arrive in Berlin by midnight August 30 at the latest.

Failure to Reply Charged

Poland, Germany charged, failed to reply and yesterday afternoon Ambassador Josef Lipski called at the foreign office, but had no plenary powers. The German government, therefore, was compelled, it was stated, to draw the conclusion that Poland had brusquely rejected the proposals, in view of reports of Polish mobilization.

[According to the German radio version, the Germans proposed to London on Tuesday the sixteen-point program. A Polish representative was requested to come to Berlin fully empowered to negotiate before Wednesday night.

[After a careful reading of the complicated German texts, however, it became clear that the 16 points were communicated to London only Wednesday night—when the time limit for the arrival of the Polish negotiator already had expired. On Tuesday night British Ambassador Henderson had received only the general German demand for negotiations within 24 hours and the specific points—never communicated from Berlin to Warsaw—were given to Henderson "when he delivered the last British note;" that is, Wednesday night.

[On the best authority in London it was stated that the proposals contained in the Berlin broadcast had been "read over" to Henderson late Wednesday night, but so rapidly to Henderson that the envoy could not get "a clear idea" of what they were all about, and was unable to obtain a copy of the project when he asked for one.—Editor's note.]

The German government made these developments public with publication of the entire exchange of secret notes and communications between Britain and Germany during the past week.

Germany, it was said, was willing to undertake direct negotiations with Poland because the British government had proposed it.

"The German government believed it had the right to expect under these conditions that at least the naming of a Polish negotiator would take place immediately," D. N. B. said.

However, according to D. N. B., "the Fuehrer and the German government waited vainly for the arrival of a Polish negotiator."

D. N. B. continued:

"Under these circumstances the German government had to assume that its proposals were rejected, although it was of the opinion that these were given in a form capable of loyal and fair fulfillment."

Soviet Urged As 1 of 4

Soviet Russia, with whom Germany recently signed a nonaggression pact, figured for the first time in the negotiations for a settlement by being proposed by Germany as one of four powers who would constitute the international commission governing the Corridor before and during the plebiscite. The other nations proposed were England, France and Italy.

The plebiscite would be held within 12 months. The plebiscite would apply to "the Corridor running from Marianwerder to Grudziasz, Kulm and Bydgoszcz."

(Grudziasz, Kulm and Bydgoszcz are in a line running southwest for about 60 miles from Marienwerder. Marienwerder is in East Prussia, near the Corridor frontier, about 45 miles south of the Baltic. It was not immediately clear whether the plebiscite would apply to all of the Corridor north of this line. Bydogszcz is about 60 miles south of the Baltic.)

Announcement of Exchange

Following is the D. N. B. announcement regarding the German-English correspondence:

"The British government in the note of August 28 to the German government offered to arrange direct negotiation between Germany and Poland on disputed problems.

"The British government left no doubt that it appreciated the urgency of the danger . . .

"The German government, in an answer of August 22 (sic), despite its skepticism as to the will of the Polish government to come to any sort of an understanding, agreed to accept the offer of British mediation in the interest of peace.

"It emphasized that in view of the situation there was need for hasty action and that negotiations must take place at once.

"It declared its willingness to receive an authorized representative of the Polish government up to the night of August 30 on condition that he be authorized not only to conduct discussions, but to negotiate and conclude agreements.

British Assurances Cited

"The German government said further that pending the arrival of this Polish negotiator it could inform the British government of the foundations of an offer for an understanding.

"Instead of receiving a report of the arrival of an authorized Polish personality, the Reich government got as an answer the report of Polish mobilization.

"First on August 30 at almost midnight the German government received more general assurance from the British government of a readiness on their part to begin negotiating.

"Despite the fact that by the failure of the Polish negotiators to arrive as expected by the German government, the preconditions for negotiations had vanished, the foreign minister gave the British Ambassador a note bringing to his attention the text of the German proposals for presentation in event of the arrival of a Polish negotiator. . . . Because the British government itself has pleaded for direct negotiations . . .

"The German government believed it had the right to expect under these conditions that at least the naming of a Polish negotiator would take place immediately.

"For it is to be said of the German government that it did not only express willingness to undertake such negotiations but also that it was standing ready but not to be put off by the Polish government with empty phrases and noncommittal statements."

Envoy Lacked Authority

"From the demarche which took place meanwhile it became clear that the Polish Ambassador here was not authorized to enter any sort of discussions or negotiations.

"So the Fuehrer and German government waited vainly for the arrival of a Polish negotiator.

"Under these circumstances the German government had to assume that its proposals were rejected . . .

"The Reichs government believes in its duty to bring to public attention these proposals . . .

"The situation between Germany and Poland is such that any new incident could set off military forces drawn up on either side of the line.

"Any peaceful settlement must be of such a nature that conditions which now prevail cannot arise again because of new tension not only in eastern Europe but also in other territories.

"The Reichs government takes the attitude in these proposals to find a final solution which will remove the impossible border demarcation situation, guarantee both sides their vital connecting roads, remove the minorities problem insofar as possible, and insofar as this is not possible to make the fate of minorities bearable through a sure guarantee of their rights . . ."

British Censor All Foreign Messages

Restrict Food Buying, Plane Service, Ban Arms and Cameras

By the Associated Press

London, Aug. 31.—(Passed by British Censor).—Acting under defense regulations, the government tonight established full censorship of all communications in and out of England, applied restrictions upon purchase of food and upon flights of civil aircraft in the United Kingdom, and suspended all telephone service abroad.

At 6:57 p. m. (12:57 p. m., E. S. T.) censors walked into cable, telephone and wireless offices and halted all services. Shortly thereafter it was announced that cabled news copy must be submitted to the censor at cable offices. Meanwhile the telephone exchange refused all outgoing calls and said incoming calls also were subject to the censor.

It was made an offense for anyone to buy more than a week's supply of any kind of food. The restriction does not apply to stocks of food acquired by merchants in the ordinary manner, but it is an offense for a merchant to sell to a customer if he has grounds for knowing the customer is buying an excessive quantity.

To Curb Profiteering

It was stated officially the order does not mean there is a food shortage. The government's plan was designed to prevent profiteering and to maintain the flow of distribution and provide all regularly with a fair share.

One week's supply of food generally was taken as a reasonable maximum limit.

The board of trade authorized search of any premises to learn whether the order was being contravened.

The civil aircraft flight restrictions were announced about the same time. Certain areas were announced as prohibited, including most of eastern England.

Night Flights Banned

Land planes were restricted to landings at Shoreham, Belfast, Bristol, Liverpool and Perth and flying boats to Poole and Pembroke.

Planes were forbidden to fly at night. The carriage of arms, explosives and cameras, and the transmission of radio messages other than those for navigation purposes, were forbidden.

All planes were ordered to carry identity and nationality documents for all crew members and to display prominently their identification marks.

Croydon Airport was closed to civil aviation. It was expected that air services from the continent would be suspended.

No Telephoning Abroad

The British postal department, which controls telephone and telegraph communications, announced that "all telephone services with countries abroad and ships at sea are suspended."

"During the present emergency, telegrams are liable to the risk of considerable delay as a result of heavy demands upon the service. The sender of every telegram, whether for a destination in this country or elsewhere, must until further notice insert his full name and address in a space provided on the telegram form for reference.

"Telegrams for ships at sea (with the exception of telegrams and radio telegrams on British government service) can be accepted only if written in plain English or plain French and on the understanding that they are accepted at the sender's risk.

Code Telegrams Barred

"No inquiry can be made as to the disposal of telegrams or radio telegrams and claims for reimbursement of sums paid for transmission or otherwise cannot be considered.

"Telegrams in code or cipher or without text are not admitted.

"The double rate service for 'urgent' telegrams is withdrawn.

"All telegrams for places abroad and radio telegrams, besides bearing the full name and address of the sender in the space provided for reference, also must include the name of the sender (individual or firm) at the end of the text.

"Registered abbreviated addresses are not admissible either as addresses or as names of senders."

In addition, the postmaster general announced that all licenses for radio transmitting and receiving stations for experimental purposes had been withdrawn.

QUEENS OF THE SKY. The Shoreham Terrace has gone high as a kite in its entertainment. Succeeding high diver "Speedy" Phoenix, the Queens of the Sky will come to the Terrace on Monday. There are five Sky Queens, all young and lovely, and they'll perform 120 feet up in the air, without benefit of nets. After challenging fate by balancing on heads, hands and feet, the Queens will descend whirlwind fashion suspended by their teeth. The act is a new one, presented for the first time this year. Come up to the Terrace next week prepared to hold your breath!

Sh-h-h! The date has been set for the Mayflower's annual "champagne and orchids party" always so well attended by the gentry hereabouts, but it can't be told. Watch out for some astonishing and smart advertising.

RINGSIDE CAMERA, Metronome Room. A big crew of those Annapolis first classmen who docked at the Washington Navy Yard yesterday from their summer cruise. And dancing with some of the prettiest girls in town . . . Cape Caprice. Manager Daniel Wathey of the Roger Smith Hotel and chic Mrs. Wathey stopping for a minute before taking the streamliner to New York where we hear there's a fair. Mr. Wathey tells us that President O. A. de Lima, of the Roger Smith Hotels, will be back from Cuba shortly and final plans for the fall and winter season in Caprice will then be worked out . . . Carlton Cocktail Lounge. Theo Rogers, Manila publisher, who's on his way to Europe and the "war of nerves." Curtis Hodges of the Greater National Capital Committee. Manager Frank Swadley, of the Carlton, who's still as enigmatic as the Mona Lisa about the Manhattan orchestra due in Shar-Zad about September 15.

There's absolutely nothing to that story going the rounds about Meyer Davis starting a new night club here this fall. The yarn's just a hangover from Mrs. Evalyn Walsh's night spot project, now high and dry. Meyer was in on the dickering which turned out to be no dicker.

FISHLESS FISHING PARTY. We regret to report that nary a fish was caught on the recent angling expedition of Madrillon's Peter Borras, Neptune Room's, Raymond Lurba, Sam Steinmetz and "Andy" (I. G.) Anderson. Wait! Mr. Lurba, who's offering the Neptune Room trophy for the biggest fish caught this fall, did land one 2-inch perch, was unanimously told, "That's no fish."

Stunt of the week. Russ Le Beau, of Bamboo Gardens, playing a harmonica while standing on his head. His announcement was even better than the trick. He said, "I will now play Rachmaninoff upsidedown and backward." Then added craftily, "This is not legit."

NOVACHORD TRIBUTE. A New York businessman who likes to play the piano for fun, came to town for one day last week, stayed four days more just to listen to the Rainbow Room's novachord. Then he went back to New York and bought himself a novachord. Later he's coming back to town to get tips on novachord playing from Rainbow's Milton Davis.

Jack Manning, of Hi Hat's "Strings of Romance," tells us that the Hi Hat patrons prefer either numbers that have fully come into their own as hits, such as "Well, All Right" and the "B. B. Polka," or the real oldies. They want no trafficking with experimental tunes. It must be the businessman reaction.

Hazel Warren, Manhattan singer, who'll appear at the Hour Glass Birthday Party this evening

Eddie Daniels, comedian-organist of the Neptune Room

FUN, ALL RIGHT, is that barn dance with the customers that the Muriel Kretlow dancers are promoting in the Lotus floor show. Some of the customers have to be coaxed considerable before they'll go barn dancing, but they love it when they once get out on the floor and start prancing. P. S.—The Muriel Kretlow girls will be held over next week at Lotus. New specialty acts.

Pete Macias, of the Lounge Riviera, has gained back most of that 20 pounds he lost when the heat wave hit him. Very becoming, too. Pete wasn't meant to be the string-bean type.

FALL IS HERE at Maryland Gardens. Next Tuesday they'll open up indoors where all has been redecorated in anticipation of Louis Williams' Trio. Louis will play vibraphone and clarinet, George Smith will smack the bass, Guitarist Johnny Russo and Wanda Deane will sing. The unit will be augmented to six or seven pieces for Saturdays. Louis also tells us that he's working out a full glee club singing arrangement. Sounds no end bright and lively.

Mayfair's Jole comes naturally by that knack of making beautiful clothes. Her grandmother, Mrs. Ruth Bonafe, concocted the stage costumes of the late Marilyn Miller, long the queen of Ziegfeld's Follies.

LAST CALL AT GLEN ECHO. With the arrival of Cecil Golly's orchestra at Glen Echo next Monday, Glen Echo rolls into its last week—a fine climax for a big season. The Golly music is dynamic and swing-y, cut to order for jittery feet. Chief entertainers are pretty Nancy Gay and scat-singer Gene Eyman.

For the Foodminded. All of the vegetables now being served at O'Donnell's Farms are raised right on the place. If you want an extra tomato you can walk right out in the field and pick it . . . At this time of the year, our friend, the soft shell crab is at his best, especially if you order him at Hall's down near the waterfront . . . Fish sauce made with just a smidgeon of celery seed is the secret of those tasty seafood dishes at Dick's Grill.

Ship Insurance Raised 10-Fold In Americas

War Risk Rates For Swedish Baltic Ports Withdrawn

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 31.—Marine insurance underwriters increased today, for the first time since 1912, the war-risk insurance rates on the shipment of cargoes to or from the West Indies, Central America and South America, thus indicating their belief such shipping would not be free from possible interception in the event of war.

At the outbreak of the World War, one of the first insurance claims was on the cargo of a vessel attacked and sunk not far from New York Harbor.

The rate on goods moving to or from South America, West Indies and Central America on vessels flying other than the American flag, or Latin-American flags (and excluding German and Italian flag ships), was increased today to 50c on each $100 of the shipment's value, as against the previous charge of 5 cents on each $100. All warrisk insurance has been canceled on German and Italian ships.

The rate on merchandise shipped to or from those ports in vessels flying the American flag, or a South American flag, was boosted to 12½ cents per $100 valuation from 5 cents. War risk rates for Swedish Baltic ports were withdrawn, to be quoted only on application.

No Insurance Against Allies

Marine insurance underwriters, acting on the assumption that the navies of Great Britain and France would control the seas in the event of war, also announced that warrisk insurance on ocean cargoes will go on a "free of British or French capture" basis September 6.

Meanwhile, Americans were pouring out of Europe for home in ever-increasing numbers.

The Roosevelts had almost a family reunion when the United States liner Washington arrived today, for the wife of the President was at the pier to greet the President's mother, a son and daughter-in-law.

Mrs. Sara Roosevelt, in her early 80s, had been away six weeks visiting a sister in Paris. John Roosevelt and his wife, the former Anne Lindsay Clark, said they found England and France calm.

Schwab Arrives

Aboard also was Charles M. Schwab, the steel magnate, described as seriously ill of coronary thrombosis. He was stricken August 9 in London.

Also on the ship—which carried 934 passengers, 200 short of capacity—were Edward G. Robinson, screen actor; his wife and their 6-year-old son.

There were reports that other Americans seeking to flee Europe are having their troubles. In Paris a line of determined tourists, mostly Americans, waited at the door of the Lloyd Triestino Lines, an Italian firm, whose ships canceled their scheduled departures from Italian ports for the United States, leaving hundreds stranded. The tourists want their money back. Payment was so slow many have been waiting two days.

500 Leave Netherlands

More fortunate were 500 Americans, virtually all who wish to leave the Netherlands, who sailed aboard the Dutch steamer Johan van Olden Barnevelt from Amsterdam for New York. Two hundred more Americans, mostly women and children, sailed from Rome on the liner President Monroe.

Sailing eastward from New York about the same time as the German liner Bremen, which had been delayed for an intensive customs search, were the Cunard-White Star's Aquitania and the Anchor Line's Transylvania, both British.

There were reports, lacking confirmation, that two British navy ships were standing out to sea to convoy the Aquitania home. Among her 434 passengers was Sir Ronald Lindsay, recently retired as British Ambassador to the United States.

Radio messages to the liner went unanswered. Her ports and windows were painted black.

Liner Doesn't Answer

The Transylvania, with nearly 300 passengers, carried sandbags.

The Furness liner Queen of Bermuda received clearance papers and sailed for an unannounced destination, believed to be England. She thus abandoned, under orders of the British admiralty, a seven-year routine of cruising between New York and Bermuda.

She took no passengers; her windows were painted a frosty gray; her exterior lamp sockets were without bulbs.

The German ship Columbus was scheduled to reach New York Saturday from Willemstad, Dutch West Indies. She had been held at Curacao several days on orders of the Nazi government. The Columbus has 745 passengers.

Of nine Labor Day cruises scheduled out of New York, five have been canceled.

Mystery Visitors Sought

Philadelphia, Aug. 31 (AP).—Identity of a German-speaking couple—a fair-haired man and a well-groomed woman—who drove up to a Delaware River dock under cover of darkness in a long, black limousine, hired a launch and boarded the German freighter Wiegand without authority after the missing ship cleared port was sought today by customs officers.

The couple returned to shore after an hour's visit.

A pilot who took the Wiegand down river from Philadelphia Saturday said her captain received a short-wave radio message as he neared open sea, turned around abruptly and anchored off Marcus Hook, Pa. There the two mysterious visitors came aboard.

The freighter sailed out of the Delaware River Sunday with clearance papers for Norfolk, Va. It has been unreported since.

Canada Seizes 5 To Halt Smuggling

Windsor, Ontario, Aug. 31. (Canadian Press).—Canadian mounted police claimed to have smashed a huge alcohol smuggling ring today in the arrest here of five customs officials. Police said that in addition, Rocco Perri, once the self-styled king of the bootleggers, had been taken into custody at Toronto.

The customs men were scheduled to appear in court late today to answer charges of accepting bribes.

Warns U. S. About 'Peewee Hitlers'

By the United Press.

The House Committee on Un-American Activities last night cautioned American citizens against heeding the appeals of "peewee Hitlers" whom the committee described as Fascist racketeers seeking to change the United States' form of government.

In a preliminary report on its inquiry into Fascist activities the committee said that numerous Nazi and Fascist groups were at work in the United States.

"Like Adolf Hitler," the report said, "these American Fascists make their chief appeal to the basest forms of race hatred."

Nazi Armies Expected to Strike in East

Observers Believe Strategy Will Call For Defense in West

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Aug. 31.—Foreign observers believe Germany's plan in the event of war may be to concentrate at the start on the east and leave only a defensive force in the western front fortifications until the eastern border can be cleared satisfactorily.

But this is a presumption based on studies of the situation, rather than knowledge of any military plan that may exist.

No inkling of a strategic plan of action has been given.

Observers expect chiefly bombing and artillery activities in the west between the French Maginot line and the German fortifications facing it, producing a stalemate for some time.

Brenner Pass Crucial

Some hesitation, they say, may be shown by both sides in taking the initiative in bombing large cities lest this produce world-wide resentment that might nullify military objectives to be gained by such destruction.

To the south, Italy, Germany's ally, would be expected to defend the Brenner and other passes through the Alps from a possible attempt by the French to get at Germany from the side door. But since it is generally believed that Britain and France would strike hardest at the outset at Italy, this side door to Germany has not been left completely unguarded.

Italian Plan Set Out

Germans are being told Italy is prepared to do these things in the event of war:

Launch a lightning attack on the French frontier, accompanied by air raids on French cities, harbors and military establishments.

Open a similar offensive in North Africa.

Cut the Mediterranean by controlling the 90-mile straits between Sicily and Tunisia.

Destroy British naval and air bases at Malta and Alexandria by air attack; possibly also attack the Suez Canal.

Attack Gibraltar by air from Spanish bases.

Sever communications between France and North Africa.

Possibly give France trouble in the Pyrenees, on France's southern border.

Four-Way Attack Seen

Germany's first move, foreign observers believe, would be to advance on Poland from four sides simultaneously: from East Prussia southward and into Danzig; from Pomerania eastward into Pomorze (the Polish Corridor) toward Danzig; from German Silesia into Polish Silesia rich industrial region, and from Slovakia northward.

An attempt also would be made to reach the most distant sections of Poland in order to keep out supplies from the Black Sea through Rumania, they say. This might be a task for the army of Slovakia or—if Hungary chose to join—for the Hungarian army stationed in what was part of Czecho-Slovakia.

Russia Holds Key

Or this could be a task assigned to the Soviet Russian army if the Germans succeed in getting a military pact with Moscow.

How fast operations on the western front would begin, according to these presumptions, would depend a great deal on the amount of effective aid given by Russia.

It seems to be the German wish, observers say, to dispose of Poland as swiftly as possible and thus eliminate the old bogey of a "two-front" war. Direct Russian military aid might hasten realization of that desire.

Paris, Aug. 31 (INS).—The Department of France of the American Legion today offered the offices of all Legionnaires in France to the French government.

The Legion's War Activities Committee offered the services of Legionnaires to drive front line ambulances or munition trucks, "or for any other service which might be requested."

A Level-Headed Youth Pays Capital Brief Visit

William Holden Takes Quick Fame in Stride; More First-Flight Stars Coming to Olney; News Notes and Gossip of the Theater

IT WAS AN ALERT, intelligent and clean-cut young man the drama desks met at luncheon in the Variety Club yesterday afternoon at 1. A little surprised, but by no means bewildered, by the sudden success that has come to him in the title role of "Golden Boy," Columbia's picturization of the Clifford Odets play, opening on the screen at the Earle Theater today, William Holden surveys his future through the eyes of a well-balanced and thoughtful young man. He entertains no delusions of grandeur, but expresses a profound hope that he may be able to live up to the extraordinary promise of his budding career in motion pictures.

BELL

The whole thing happened suddenly enough to sweep anybody off his feet. The youthful Mr. Holden was in the midst of a course in chemistry at South Pasadena Junior College—his father is a chemist operating his own business and the oldest son of the family was expected to carry on the family tradition—when a Hollywood talent scout spotted him and requested an interview and possible screen test at Paramount next day. That had to be deferred a day or two because midyear exams were coming up just then. At Paramount, as it turned out, Holden was tossed into a test in which the principal object of interest to the producers was a young woman whom he merely was to support in a scene or two. When the film was viewed on the screen, they forgot all about the girl and signed Bill. His engagement for the role of Joe Bonaparte in "Golden Boy" was equally sudden and unexpected. But there he is and doing a fine job of it, too, as you will perceive when you see his performance at the Earle.

It is not often that a young man with no stage experience beyond a college play or two is given the stellar role in a company that includes such distinguished players as Barbara Stanwyck, Adolphe Menjou, Joseph Calleia, Ed Brophy and the others to be seen in "Golden Boy," all of whom had been placed under contract while the studio heads and Director Rouben Mamoulian still was searching for a suitable lad to play the title part. Such an eventuation might be expected to turn the head of any young man still hovering about his majority. William Holden, however, seems to have taken the whole thing in stride.

As between the stage and screen, quite naturally, his present enthusiasm is for the cinema. "After all," he says, "my principal stage experience consisted of eight lines to speak in a play that ran for 11 days. It would take a good many of those to make one 'Golden Boy.'"

Other Roles in Sight

The impetus given his start by the Odets play is carrying over into at least two additional stellar assignments. The first probably will be with George Raft in a film version of Warden Lawes' story of "Invisible Stripes," in which he will portray the upright younger brother opposed to gangsterism; the second a tentative successor to "Golden Boy," to be called "The Girl from Newark," in which the career of Lorna Moon (Barbara Stanwyck) will provide the theme and Holden again presumably will be seen as Joe Bonaparte. Of this, however, he has not even heard from any studio source.

William Holden is a huskier young fellow than he looks on the screen. Standing a good 6 feet in height, I should say that he weighs somewhere around 170, give or take a pound or two. His hair is dark, thick and wavy, his features finely chiseled and his eyes clear and bright. He has a million dollar smile when he cuts it loose, as he frequently does.

His present junket East is his first visit to the Atlantic Seaboard. Born in O'Fallon, Ill., he has lived since childhood in California and never before has visited farther East than the Middle West. His present trip is not a vacation jaunt but is being devoted strictly to business. He has much to say concerning the educational advantages of a motion picture career in matters of contracts, agents and the innumerable other business complexities that surround a star—especially a new one not yet firmly established and able to dictate his own terms. He judges from the portion of it he was able to see en route from the airport to the Willard Hotel that Washington is quite a city which he really would like to visit sometime. He left town last evening.

Did His Own Fiddling

Incidentally, Holden does play the violin and did his own bowing during the filming of "Golden Boy." And he cordially hates that particular instrument, although he is fond of music. "You can practice your fingers off on the fiddle for 10 years or so and what have you got in the way of a competence, unless you are a genius? And maybe even then nobody will notice it or want to buy it."

Despite the family tradition in chemistry, his father and mother are pleased at their son's determination to quit college and embrace the opportunity that might never have come to him again. There is no family rancor over the move. After all, his options come up every six months and if he wants to quit and go back to the test tubes and retorts he can.

And another thing. Despite its seeming fidelity to the original stage play, Bill confided yesterday that 1,700 changes in lines had been made in the picture script. But they were made before the picture was put in work and so did not have to be learned, forgotten and relearned on the set—one of the hardest tricks of all.

Even so, one suspects that had it been necessary William Holden would have been able to do it with the best of them, even in his first picture. He seems to have that sort of a mind.

It now appears that after Mary Brian's two weeks at the Olney Theater, Clifton Webb and Libby Holman will be seen in "Burlesque" at Panjandrum Stephen E. Cochran's summer theater, after all. Mr. Webb's health is sufficiently improved to give rise to the belief that he will be able to appear with Miss Holman the week of September 11. After that, the tentative booking is Jane Cowl in "Easy Virtue," to be followed on September 25 by Ethel Barrymore in either "The Constant Wife" or "Whiteoaks." With that, Impresario Cochran may be content to call it a season—a season that might well be termed all-star.

Washington's theatrical world, together with her host of friends, today is mourning the death of Mrs. Catherine Ellen Crandall, widow of the late Harry M. Crandall, pioneer motion picture exhibitor and founder of the theaters that bore his name and now constitute the foundation of the Warner Brothers circuit in and around the National Capital. Mrs. Crandall was known and loved by all associated with her husband in the earlier days of the "movies." Deepest condolences are extended her daughters, Mrs. John J. Payette and Mrs. LeRoy Sherman, of Washington, and Mrs. William T. Burch, of Alexandria, Va., and their families.

It seems worth a reminder that five week-end moonlight cruises will be made by the S. S. Potomac on Friday, Saturday and Sunday of this week, with the Andrews Sisters and Phil Napoleon's Orchestra as the featured attractions. Cruises will start each night at 8:45 p. m., with two extras Saturday and Sunday nights at 12:30, post-midnight.

Now I know where all those scooters I've been falling over on my way home every yawning have gone. The Roxyettes will be using them in a new "dance" routine on the Earle stage this week.

Lee Tracy Reveals Some Facts

By Frederick C. Othman

United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, Aug. 31.—"The trouble," Lee Tracy said today, "is that every time anything happens in connection with me, and I mean anything, everybody thinks that Lee Tracy is drunk again."

He was talking about newspaper headlines last month, which told of Tracy attacking his butler in Honolulu and being sought on charges of attempted mayhem—or worse. The news from the islands was a little vague.

"I didn't know anything about the stories until I got back to the mainland," Tracy said.

"What happened was that I sailed my yacht in the annual Honolulu race and before I started I signed up a very fine cook named Herman. Herman could cook an excellent dinner, even when the boat was three sheets in the wind. His only fault was that he liked to get three sheets in the wind himself. But I forgave him that because he was such an artist with the skillet.

"So when we got to Honolulu, Herman immediately got drunk. I bailed him out and he came back to cook. And when it was time for me to leave the islands on a liner I foolishly gave Herman $25 in back pay. This was a mistake. He got drunk all over again and had a fight with a policeman and landed in a hospital.

"I was at sea then. But Herman must have told some tall tales from his hospital bed. When I got back here I saw the stories about me taking a whack at him. It all goes to show that no matter what happens to Tracy, everybody believes he's drunk again."

Truth is, Tracy hasn't had a drink in more than two years, or since his widely publicized escapade on a hotel balcony in Mexico City during a patriotic parade. That nearly ruined him as a movie actor. But he went on the wagon and eventually beat his way back to the top. He will star in "See How They Run," which will hit the RKO cameras in two weeks.

We interviewed Tracy more than a year ago. At that time he said he never intended to marry. He liked the freedom of bachelorhood too much. A few weeks later he got married.

"What happened," he explained, "was that this girl dropped in to see me about some insurance on my boat. She had been sent by one of the big agencies with which I had done business.

"One thing led to another and we got married and I haven't regretted a moment of it. I hope she hasn't, either."

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

(Writing from Hollywood while on vacation.)

FEATURE STORY: Nijinsky, the famous dancer who was sent to an insane asylum in 1914, was discharged last week from the institution in Berne, Switzerland, and may be brought to America . . . His wife, writing to friends in Hollywood, is asking that a benefit show be arranged or that a patron be found who is willing to finance the trip . . . Nijinsky, she reports, has many lucid moments now—moments in which she attempts to reconstruct the present world for him . . . explaining the great war, Hitler, radio . . . "Dr. Sakel, who discovered the insulin shock treatments, is in America now and can help him," she writes. "After such treatments I'm sure he will be able to dance again. It's been a tremendous task re-educating him again to normal life, society and his art. My task is not completed yet. He is going to live with me in freedom, and I hope he will never have to be taken to an asylum again."

POLITICS: Paul Smith, colleague of Herbert Hoover and general manager of the San Francisco Chronicle, will be called as a defense witness by Harry Bridges in connection with the deportation proceedings against the West Coast labor leader . . . In San Francisco last week Bridges told me that Smith will testify that, to the best of his knowledge, Bridges is not a Communist.

MOVIES DEPT.: Nunnally Johnson observed W. C. Fields gulping three quick ones, and asked: "Bill, you still drink a lot, don't you?" . . . Fields nodded, and in attestation ordered two more . . . "Do you ever get the D. T.'s out here?" asked Johnson . . . "I dunno," replied Fields. "Out here it's hard to tell where Hollywood ends and the D. T.'s begin."

FICTION DEPT.: Dore Schary, the Academy Award winner, is writing the screen story of "The Life of Thomas Edison." He went East to confer with one of Edison's daughters concerning some biographic liberites required for movie purposes . . . "It's quite all right to make those changes," the lady assured Schary. "I can understand that. Father had a high, squeaky voice—and I know that just wouldn't do for Spencer Tracy."

EMPLOYMENT DEPT.: Orson Welles has rented a home next door to Shirley Temple . . . Shirley and her mother visited Welles and saw his 1-year-old daughter, Christopher Welles . . . "Is Christopher going into pictures?" Mrs. Temple asked . . . "Not until she's 2," Orson replied. "You see—first I want her to have a normal childhood."

ETIQUETTE DEPT.: Arthur Caesar and Edward G. Robinson have been friends since the days when Robinson's family owned a butcher shop in New York. Caesar therefore was surprised when he received an engraved invitation, bearing a gold crest, inviting him to attend a soiree at Robinson's home . . . He studied the elegant card, rubbed his finger over the engraved "R. S. V. P." and shrugged: "I can't help it, me with my television eyes. I keep looking at this fancy gold-crested card—and all I see is butcher paper."

FINANCE DEPT.: Groucho Marx attended the Metro luncheon in honor of Gov. Baldwin, of Connecticut. He listened to the distinguished speakers describe, in rhapsodic phrases, the beauties of Connecticut, its traditions and natural wonders . . . "It's no use, your Excellency," Groucho whispered to Baldwin. "Connecticut will be remembered only for being the most direct route to to Narragansett race track."

LOCAL NEWS: Paul Draper will forego all night club and theater engagements after his appearance at the Persian Room and will try the concert field . . . Franchot Tone worked the first ten days in "Fast and Furious" without a contract. Someone forgot to sign him . . . Leo McCarey is screen-testing Dudley Field Malone . . . After the premiere of "Stanley and Livingstone" the Fox studio publication ran out of adjectives and resorted to this headline: "Zanuck Personally Swept Off Feet" . . . The Hays office has eliminated one line from the "Tattooed Lady" song in the new Marx Bros. film. The line read: "When she walks, the world is littler; when she sits, she sits on Hitler."

TRAVEL DEPT.: Ashton Stevens, the drama critic, is vacationing here, after a trip to Washington, where he resumed his friendship with Charles Michelson, publicist for the Dem. Natl. Comm. . . . Michelson, who had worked with Stevens in Frisco, insisted upon sending a car to the hotel to bring Stevens to the White House . . . Stevens preferred a cab, but Michelson was adamant . . . The car arrived and Stevens noticed a simple insignia, "PRESIDENT" . . . "Oh, Charlie shouldn't have done that—sending Roosevelt's personal car," Stevens told the chauffeur . . . "This isn't Mr. Roosevelt's car," the chauffeur explained. "It's the Studebaker model—'President.'"

Milk Babies

The healthiest group of people in Hollywood, according to the M-G-M milkman, were on the "Babes in Arms" set. He left more than fifty quarts of milk there each day.

Swims 'Like Fish'

Ann Rutherford literally swims like a fish—she can swim under water, but not on top of the water.

Takes 'Powder'

A live toad being used for a scene in "Henry Goes Arizona," with Frank Morgan, hopped into a box of powder in the actor's make-up box by accident.

Grows Half Inch

Since coming to Hollywood seven months ago, June Preisser finds she has grown half an inch.

Crooner Develops Into Fashion Plate

Bing Crosby is going clothes crazy. Famous as a devotee of nonchalant dress, featured by loud sports shirts and loose-fitting slacks, the crooner today has completely reversed himself and is going overboard on sartorial splendor.

This perforce doesn't indicate a change of heart on Crosby's part, but only that he can't help himself. He has 21 different costumes to wear in his new film, "The Star Maker," all of the 1915-20 period, and all must be tailored.

The result is that studio tailors haunt Bing's every waking moment. They follow him to his dressing room at noon, and even to the radio station where he does his weekly broadcast.

"Clothes crazy? You're not kidding," moans the crooner

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., Aug. 31.—"Northwest Passage" company back from location is tired, but happy. Norman Foster seems to be the only one who had fun—says that's because he enjoys the wide, open spaces. Bob Young's happiness was marred when he got lost and couldn't find his way back to camp, rode for hours in pitch darkness. Walter Brennan insists that swamp was the realest thing he's ever seen. Once, forgot to watch his step, fell in a hole and practically disappeared. Walter says he now knows why Spencer Tracy is Hollywood's greatest actor—Spence reads his lines not as though he were reading a script, but as though he were thinking those lines.

HOPPER

Amusing incident on trip was when Brennan, Tracy and Director King Vidor broke trail to a secluded lake, congratulated themselves on being the first white persons there, when out jumped three women from the bushes and demanded autographs. Brennan says in all his life that's the silliest thing that's ever happened to him. And says they worked from "daylight till unconscious"—but what a picture! You'll have to see it twice. Once for the actors, once for scenery. The clouds are real scene stealers!

It's certainly a reversal of the old order of tearful wife bidding farewell to her off-to-war spouse. But that's what writer Charles Bennett (of "Balalaika," "39 Steps," etc.) may do if England goes to war. His wife, Faith, is a member of Civil Air Guard and is daily expecting to be called, has her uniform out, and all set to go. Bet she'd be the only woman in Hollywood called to arms! Well, that kind, anyway!

Reminds me of the wire I received from a British editor who says he's tired of hearing how our Hollywood English actors are members of the reserve, and ready to go at a moment's notice. "Most of them are too old to fight. Others have already taken out their American citizenship papers. So where does that leave us?" Right here, milord, listening to them talk about His Majesty's Lancers, and showing us their ribbons and medals! Only real uniform we've seen is that of Mrs. Bennett.

And there's something rather naive about the backers of the Advance Music Co. who published the song: "Mr. Roosevelt Won't You Please Run Again?" The organizers of the company are "Dudley Diggs, Englishman; Gale Sondergaard, Danish, and husband Herbert Biberman, Joe Pasternak, Austrian; Bruce Manning, American—but he speaks with an Irish accent. I say—Let Freedom Ring!

Leo Carrillo is now Mayor of West Los Angeles, same place Leo's great grandfather Carlos Antonio Carrillo—first provisional Governor of California, once owned. He owned vast tract of 70,000 acres. Still, Leo isn't doing badly—he still has 3,000 acres.

Basil Rathbone wants his Bel Air home to have an unobstructed view, so bought the adjoining property. Now doesn't know what to do with it. How about raising your own vegetables, Basil?

Edward Ellis' first job as cash boy at Marshall Fields earned him $2 a week. Now, in "Three Sons" he plays the owner of that store.

At Slapsie Maxie's preview the other night, Maxie was counting out the bank night prize of $1.89 to Binnie Barnes, and got mixed up. Someone yelled: "The only count Maxie knows is ten."

Have you ever heard of a song being so good that they rewrote a picture so they could end it with a song, instead of putting it in the middle? Well, that's exactly what they've done in "First Love" with Deanna Durbin. Her recording of "Madam Butterfly" is the finest I've ever heard, and I've heard them all. It not only leaves you limp but raises goose pimples like the foothills of the Rockies. If that wizard of sound, Brown, doesn't get the award for that, then there's no justice in Hollywood.

Just heard that when Tito Schipa sang for the Armour people at their home one evening, he refused $3,500 because he had learned they'd lost millions the day before. What a contrast to one of our leading baritones who was asked to sing at a wedding of an old school friend, not very wealthy. He sang, was extremely affable, accepted his friend's thanks—then sent in a bill for $1,250.

When I think how hard Alec Woollcott tried to get on the stage some years ago and now the difficulty they've had in finding someone capable of playing his part in the Moss Hart-George Kaufman play—I go slightly on the hysterical side. Adolphe Menjou was up for it, and now Monty Wooly who bears as much resemblance to Woolcott as an ant hill does to Pike's Peak, is back there rehearsing for it. And Monty would be swell.

Judy Garland's having a glorious time in New York, but writes she'd rather be home—where no one pays attention to her. I know how you feel Judy, but don't forget Will Rogers' advice—your worries start when they stop noticing you.

With Metro's two big pictures being released so close together—meaning "The Wizard of Oz" and "The Women," they're singing "The Wonderful Women of Oz."

The gals in McCall, Idaho, can thank Spence Tracy for starting a new fad in hair-dos. A bit reminiscent of George Washington's arrangement of tying hair in back—they call it the "Tracy Twirl."

When Joan Blondell found out Garbo was shopping at Irene's she was as excited as any fan. "Is she coming out yet?" Joan queried. "I just have to have her autograph." But Joan waited in vain for hours, then had to leave. Greta selected her personal wardrobe in the quiet and peace of the inner sanctums.

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Aug. 31 (INS).—Repeated attempts to contact Geraldine Fitzgerald by telephone in Ireland today were unsuccessful. The report came back that the lines were tied up due to the pressure of government business during the war crisis. She is wanted back to go into "Underground," a story of Nazi Germany and the secret movement against Hitler.

LOUELLA PARSONS

I was very interested to hear that Richard Barthelmess, who spent a large part of his movie life on the Warner lot, both as a First National and later as a Warner star, has made a test for the role of the older brother. John Garfield plays the younger and Dick's part is second in importance only to that of Garfield. He is due to sign a contract any day now, not only for "Underground," but other pictures to follow. Certainly the fans proved they wanted Dick back when he got such an ovation in a small part in "Only Angles Have Wings."

The Ritz Brothers and Twentieth Century-Fox have finally said adieu to each other after many disagreements. I suppose it was the Republic deal that brought matters to a head, for the boys didn't want to go on loan to make "The Hit Parade of 1940." Under their contract they had to make outside movies when requested and, considering they were only known as cafe entertainers when Darryl Zanuck signed them, it didn't seem an unfair agreement. The Ritzes are signed with Jules Stein, who is wise enough to give them good advice. They will make no pictures immediately, but will sail for England in three weeks, providing there isn't a war, to join the Hollywood movie clan booked for command performances and also to make personal appearances at the theaters.

Elsa Lancaster isn't going to do a picture with her "moon-faced baby" (her pet name for Charles Laughton) after all. At least, they won't be seen together until Charlie finishes "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and Elsa completes her stint in "Vigil In the Night." A part has been written into the Carole Lombard-Brian Aherne picture at R. K. O that will give Mrs. Laughton a good chance to shine. One thing I admire about the gal is that she makes no bones about being ambitious about her own career and refuses to shine in Charlie's reflected glory. "Vigil In The Night" gets underway again September 11.

Binnie Barnes was frantic today when transatlantic telephone communication was cut off. Her 13-year-old niece, Rosetta Bennett, has been in England visiting her grandmother and Binnie was completing arrangements via telephone to have her come back on a freighter—the only accommodations available. Suddenly came the astounding news that the wires were open only to government business. The last Binnie heard, the little girl is practically parked on the dock, with a supply of canned fruits and vegetables, because the food on the freight boats is not too palatable.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: George Brent is shopping for a yacht; rumors are strong that the Fred MacMurrays will soon need a nursery. Fred's birthday was celebrated with a surprise party given him by Mrs. Mac, to which Bob Taylor, Barbara Stanwyck, the Walter Langs, Jack Benny and Mary Livingstone, the Frank Capras and the Bill Wellmans and others were bidden; Arleen Whelan celebrated her twenty-second birthday today in bed, fighting the flu; Lucille Fairbanks is another flu victim; George Raft returns Saturday and bets are being made as to how Virginia Pine will receive him; Margaret Roach 2d and Ronald Hudson, an attractive Brown Derby twosome; Mrs. Bob Burns, badly hurt when she fell on the deck of Bob's yacht, must remain in a plaster cast another five weeks.

Jimmy Cagney and his wife leave over the week-end for a visit to Marthas Vineyard; there is such a demand for reservations for Del Mar over the week-end that even the auto camps are filled to capacity; Ann Warner is laid up with an injured foot; Jimmy Roosevelt will spend Labor Day at Hyde Park with his ma and pa; Mrs. Gene Towne, who is reported as having reached the property settlement stage with her husband, at Victor Hugo's with Fred Kohler, jr.; the good-looking escort taking Claire Windsor hither and yon is Melville Hall, New York socialite; Barry Brennan and Frances Robinson a Troc twosome. Ditto Dorothy Lee and Norman Levin; Lynn Bari stepping out with her bridegroom, Walter Kane, for the first time since her appendectomy.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

'Merry Wives of Windsor' Closes Season Of Summer Festivals at Sylvan Theater

A play three centuries old, performed last night in an abridged version and by an amateur cast, brought honest laughter to an audience of 2,500 people, fully conscious of the evening's sickening implications. The play was Shakespeare's "The Merry Wives of Windsor" and it was played at the Sylvan Theater by the Players Club of Central Community Center.

It was inded a tribute to the genius of the master playwright that the audience, which by all tradition of the Sylvan Festivals should have been larger, was so evidently entertained. When Queen Elizabeth remarked (ordered) that she would like to observe the fat knight in love and when Shakespeare had fulfilled her desires by writing this farce of Jack Falstaff's adventures with Windsor's gay matrons, they naturally had no thought that it would cause merriment so many generations later at a terrifying time at the foot of a stunning monument to a man yet unborn. But in a performance brought giddily to life by J. Edmund Veitch's rolling rhetoric, that is just what it did.

Mr. Veiteh, who, with Kent Dyer, also was responsible for the direction of the play, did a robust piece of reading for Falstaff's whacking lines. Scholars insist that the Falstaff of "Windsor" is a vastly inferior fellow to the Falstaff of the earlier plays, but surely he is, theatrically speaking, more sure-fire stuff. His bawdy lines were joyfully received as Mr. Veitch delivered them.

Play Is Swiftly Gaited

A second interesting quality of last night's performance was its rapid pace. With no intermission, the play skimmed from scene to scene, emphasizing the three incidents in which the fat knight is foxed by the mischievous women. While the simplicity of the settings may have been confusing to some of the audience unfamiliar with the complicated story, it enabled a quick-change scene.

The play was immediately preceded by Nicolai's celebrated overture to the play, played by the Washington Civic Orchestra, under the direction of its second conductor, Roscoe King. The strings of the orchestra were particularly effective last night, setting the mood for the play quite happily.

The remainder of the cast was better than adequate. William Leggate's Fenton was well spoken and William Sheaffer's Slender was nicely underplayed. Alice Louise Hunter was the sought-after Ann Page, as well as director of the dancing in the final scene in Windsor Forest, a setting which displayed the most advantageous use to which the Sylvan may be placed. Marian Leigh and Dorothy Braun as the conniving ladies were properly spirited and Bessie Smurak's Mistress Quickly lived up to her name.

Final Offering of Year

Kent Dyer, Rhodes K. Scherer, Gunnar Jagdmann, Fred M. Horton, Frederic Cole, Harry Whiting, Sidney Gottlieb, George E. Wilcox, Albert Sigafoose, Eve Browne, Leslie Stevens, John C. King, Frederick Mulvey and George Jenkins completed the cast.

In the final scene, the children disguised as fairies, were danced by Marjorie McGann, Gertrude Elmendorf, Kathleen Davis, Betty Israel, Selma Inoff, Claire French, Caroline Rogers, Leonabel Kuhn, Dorothy Geoghegan, Jean Clair and Patricia Zellers.

It was the eleventh and final performance in this summer's Festival series, presented at the Sylvan Theater by the Community Center Department and the Office of the National Capital Parks.

Hitler's Terms

Europe's zero hour is fast approaching. The area of diplomatic maneuver, at best highly circumscribed during these last days of intolerable tension and mounting military preparations, has shrunk almost to the vanishing point. It is difficult to see how a showdown can much longer be deferred.

Hitler's 16-point plan for a settlement of the German-Polish dispute represents a retreat only in form, but not in substance, from his earlier demands. He does not this time as when he wrote Premier Daladier of France ask for the immediate return of both Danzig and the Corridor. He now asks only for the immediate return of Danzig alone with the fate of the Corridor to be determined a year hence by a plebiscite.

That he has retreated even to this slight extent is significant. It reflects the necessity, both for domestic and external reasons, of appearing reasonable without actually abandoning his far-reaching ambitions.

Many of these 16 points are simply trimming and window dressing. The central issue lies in Points 1, 3 and 8. Point 1 provides for the immediate return of Danzig to Germany and, while it is also stipulated under Point 11 that both Danzig and Gdynia are to be "purely trade centers" and demilitarized, in view of Hitler's record the Poles can hardly place much faith in any such pledge.

Point 3 provides that the plebiscite is to be open only to those Germans and Poles who resided in the Corridor on January 1, 1918. In other words, the fact that the Corridor is now almost wholly Polish should have no bearing on its ultimate disposition, but the clock of history should be reversed.

More important is the proposal that, even if the plebiscite should favor Poland, Germany under Point 8 would be granted an extraterritorial zone for an auto road and a railway one kilometer wide. Under those circumstances Poland, in order to get to Gdynia would have to cross German territory and therefore be placed in a position where, if Germany so desires, she would be cut off from access to the sea.

In other words, the moderation of Hitler's 16 points is more apparent than real, his seeming retreat no retreat. Indeed, the present demands on Poland are greater than those made by Hitler last spring, which Poland then rejected.

So the showdown nears. Unless Hitler retreats much further than he has shown any readiness of doing up to now or unless Poland is willing to commit suicide, the prospect of a peaceful compromise is still remote.

Untimely Apology

Communists in this country who were on the limb so unceremoniously sawed off by Dictators Stalin and Hitler are finding it very difficult to regain their bearings. The District Communist Party, for example, took a week to arrive at the conclusion that Stalin has merely struck a blow for peace. And that feeble explanation is now followed by rumors from Berlin that Hitler may negotiate an agreement for some sort of military cooperation on the part of the Soviet.

One of the reasons cited by the local Communists for their pretended rejoicing over Stalin's coup is that it weakens the Berlin-Rome-Tokyo axis "which has been the active organizer of aggression and fomenter of war." It is true, of course, that the axis has been weakened. But it is also true that something equivalent to a new axis has been formed between Berlin and Moscow.

By a remarkable feat of mental gymnastics the local Communist group seems to have arrived at the conclusion that the Soviet has weakened Hitler by joining forces with him. At the same time these apologists insist that the agreement has strengthened the Soviet Union, "the land of socialism, the most dependable, the most firm defender of peace based on the interests of the people."

It may be that the position of the Moscow government has been strengthened. That depends upon many factors difficult to foresee at this time. But the one thing certain is that the sell-out to the Nazis has not strengthened Russia as a Communist state. Whatever advantage the U. S. S. R. has gained from this move will accrue to her as a partner in fascism or more likely as a tail to the Nazi kite.

The Communists are obviously having a difficult time to keep up with the news. No sooner do they devise a fantastic apology for Stalin than it is made patently ridiculous by developments in the turbulent capitals of Europe. That fact should give a good deal of comfort to those who fear the effects of foreign propaganda in this country. For by no stretch of the imagination can it now be said that the Communists here are spokesmen for the Stalin regime in Russia.

Costs Of Distribution

Most Americans will probably be surprised to learn, from a survey just completed by the Twentieth Century Fund, that out of every dollar they spend as consumers the producers of goods receive only 41 cents. The other 59 cents represents the cost of distribution. In other words, distribution is a considerably more important factor in our economic system than is production.

Vast changes in the relationship between production and distribution have come about in recent decades. The investigators found that 75 per cent of all gainfully employed workers were engaged in production activities in 1870. By 1930 workers were evenly distributed between production industries, on the one hand, and distribution and service activities, on the other.

These findings immediately suggest that manufacturing, agriculture and mining have increased in efficiency with far greater rapidity than has the distribution of goods. That assumption cannot be allowed to stand, however, without many qualifications. No doubt progress has been more rapid in production industries. But the very nature of the changes that have taken place in our economy during the last half century tends to increase distribution costs.

Concentration of large industries in favored localities increases transportation costs for both raw materials and finished goods. The multiplication of human wants stimulated by a higher standard of living necessitates larger stocks of goods from which consumers may make their selections. Moreover, mass production has become possible only because distributors have gone to the expense of creating new demands for new products.

A committee representative of various economic groups, which carefully analyzed the findings of the research experts, concludes that distribution costs are too high and suggests various ways in which some of the waste may be eliminated. It hastens to note, however, "that the reason for excessive distribution costs does not lie in the realm of generally high profits." Rather it is due to such factors as duplication of sales efforts, multiplicity of sales outlets, excessive services, unreasonable demands from consumers and poor management and planning by distributors.

Nor does the committee lay the high cost of distribution at the door of the much abused "middleman." Wholesalers are responsible for somewhat less than one-fifth of the total cost of distributing goods from producer to consumer. The slice they take off the consumer's dollar is not much more than half as large as that taken by the retailers. The committee believes that the "middleman" is an essential part of our distributive system and that our economy could scarcely exist in its present form without him.

Distribution costs may be reasonably diminished, the committee finds, by only two methods: elimination of some functions and services now offered by distributors, or performance of these functions more economically and efficiently. Specifically, it suggests study of a two-price or three-price system. Presumably the lowest price for any article would be available to those who did not require delivery of their purchases, who paid cash and forfeited the privilege of returning or exchanging the merchandise. While the committee notes difficulties in operation of such a plan, it also points out that this arrangement would place the burden of high retail costs where it belongs.

The committee strikes a telling blow at chain store tax laws as uneconomic measures which may interfere with the lowering of retail costs. Independent merchants were found to have held their own against the chains between 1929 and 1935, with 86 per cent of the country's stores still outside of chain systems.

Other valuable suggestions concern the development of consumer cooperatives, further protection of consumers from fraud, elimination of State barriers to the free movement of goods and the need of additional research work into improved methods of distribution. The committee has rendered a valuable service in a field that has too seldom been the subject of objective research. It has once more emphasized the fact that a broad understanding of our economic system is the first step toward improving its operation.

1946 And After

It has long been suspected that Filipino enthusiasm for independence has never been as great as outward manifestations would lead one to believe. But hitherto there has been no organized movement in the islands in favor of the continuation beyond 1946 of the present tie with the United States.

It is significant, therefore, that some 40 prominent Filipinos have now come together to work openly against complete independence. The group includes members of the Assembly, businessmen, educators, wealthy landowners and at least one labor leader. They favor one of three courses for the islands, namely, the indefinite maintenance of present trade relations or, if that is incompatible with American policy, dominion status or continuation of the present Commonwealth government.

"Over and above independence," said one spokesman of this group, "we love liberty." In other words, they realize that the achievement of independence from the United States may be followed by a speedy loss of freedom. Removed from the protection of the American flag, the islands would at once face the threat of becoming a prey to Japan.

With independence only six years off, unless the present arrangement is modified, the Filipinos are now seriously asking themselves whether, after having so clamorously demanded a separation from the United States, they really want it. Some of them are now definitely answering that question in the negative and it is not unlikely that the number will grow. Indeed, President Quezon went out of his way to welcome the members of this Committee of 40 and to assure them that it is "not only those who talk of independence who are the real patriots."

From this and other statements made by him in the past, it is safe to conclude that the Filipino leaders themselves do not look forward to 1946 without fear and forebodings.

Cats and Catastrophes

In the dark, says the proverb, all cats are gray. It might seem to follow that in the midnights of civilization all cats must needs be black. Perhaps then it should have caused no particular surprise that the cat which confronted the Marquis of Lothian as he left the White House Wednesday, after presenting his credentials, should have been among the blackest of the species. The important question is whether this cat is a good or evil omen—and perhaps whether it is an omen at all.

It has already been noted that this cat bears a considerable likeness to the one which has been haunting the doorsteps of Downing street since Munich. It seems almost reasonable then to ask whether these cats may not represent merely none too brilliant stratagems in this war of nerves. Assuming a conflict whose outcome hinges on the question of which side can shout "Boo!" more loudly, more often and more resolutely than the other, it is easy to imagine a band of secret agents whose job is to plant black cats at such moments when their appearance might produce the stiffest jolts to morale.

But, if such were the case, these psychological stratagems have miserably failed. The housekeeper at Downing street is said to appease the Munich cat each morning with a saucer of milk. And, with admirable sang froid, the new British Ambassador acclaimed the White House cat as the harbinger of peace. As he stroked those velvet flanks he professed to discern above them the veritable wings of a dove. So convincingly did Lord Lothian meet the situation that none of those present thought to remind him that the wings of a dove are found oftener on the inside than the outside of black cats.

But, even assuming the cat to have been a genuine portent, its significance is by no means clear. Black cats have a bad name in some quarters, mainly because they have, like spiders and toads, been traditionally associated with witches.

Now witchcraft is all very well for putting spells on cattle or turning young princesses into trees, but we suspect that it takes something more potent than witchcraft to produce a first rate historical convulsion. At any rate, black cats are not very prominently mentioned among the portents, such as earthquakes, eclipses, meteors and what not that are reported to have presaged cataclysmic events.

More significance, possibly, is to be attached to the name which, apparently by common inspiration, the White House reporters gave to the cat. They called it "Crisis." Some of them no doubt remembered afterward that at another great juncture in the affairs of mankind (see the Iliad, Book I) another "Chryses" or "Kryses" turned up. That visitation seemed for a while to make a lot of trouble. Still, many good things—including the Europe we are all so much worried about now—came out of it in the end.

The Police Courts

From Living Age.

The late Newton D. Baker often told the story of how, on a visit to London, he witnessed no less personage than the lord chief justice himself deciding a $76 houseboat case.

The incident so impressed itself upon Mr. Baker's mind that for the remainder of his life he urged that there be only one bench in all jurisdictions, with only the highest type of lawyers appointed to it, and each of them forced, by custom or by law, to preside at all manner of cases. This, he claimed, would insure a better grade judiciary than we now have, and it would also keep the judges close to the problems of all the people. Many lawyers today incline to agree with him, though so far few have felt free to advocate it with an appreciable vigor.

Several magistrates in New York City, who listen only to so-called minor cases, would grace the highest courts in the land, their daily contact with the tribulations of ordinary men and women having enlarged their vision and broadened their sympathies, while many superior judges could learn a great deal by spending time in police courts. The absurdity and hardness of opinions issuing from appellate courts spring from the fact that their judges have long since lost touch with common humanity. Instead of considering it an indignity to sit in police courts, they should consider it a privilege and a duty.

Other Corridors

To the Editor of The Post.—Sir: Apparently the Nazis in Danzig know very little American geography! There is no hope, of course, of ever correcting their mistaken impressions, but I hope that by calling attention to a couple of very obvious facts about the territorial distribution of the United States it may be possible to prevent some thoughtless Americans from being taken in by the type of propaganda represented by the post-cards that have just been received from Danzig.

According to news reports, these post-cards appeal to American sympathy by demonstrating how dreadful it would be if Canada had a corridor to the Atlantic through New England. Now, as a matter of fact, Canada does have a corridor to the sea on the other side of the continent, which cuts off Alaska from the United States. And Alaska (which is no "colony," but a potential member of the Federal Union as an organized Territory), is becoming increasingly important to the United States from many points of view. It is easily as important in a military sense as East Prussia is to Germany. We have even had controveries with Canada about this corridor and submitted them to arbitration in 1903.

In a sense, the Panama Canal is a corridor which we have through the territory of another country. It is also an exceedingly important means of communication between the Eastern and Western parts of the United States, and yet we are able to come to terms with the country through which it passes, and have by no means found it necessary to own all the land between our Southern border and the Northern coast of South America in order to maintain communications.

This is not intended to be a treatise on corridors and mixed sovereignties, but in these times we could well pay much more attention than usual to the actual, peaceful and tolerable existence of conditions similar to those which Adolf Hitler finds "intolerable."

Another "Anschluss"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As we witness the weird fluctuations of the present so-called "crisis" as we see Hitler again duping the British, by dangling before their eyes the delusive decoy of a "broad general settlement," with "peace in our time," one bald, hard face seems to be escaping notice. One would think, however, that it should be considered a highly significant fact—an immensely vital fact. I refer to the indisputable fact that Hitler has already seized Danzig.

The newspapers ought to be using again, today, that old "standing head: "Hitler Wins Again!"

The statute of the Free City has been thrown into the trash can by the Nazis. The Danzig Senate has virtually abdicated. Arbitrary, unlimited power in Danzig has passed to Hitler's personal representative, Foerster, who has become the Fuehrer of the territory. Foerster executes Hitler's will, Hitler's orders—and nothing else counts.

The New York Times correspondent on the spot reports that "There is no doubt now that the Free City's military forces have been augmented by Reich troops" and that "The countryside is thick with soldiers in the blue-gray uniform of the German air force." Hitler artillery of every caliber has been brought into Danzig. Hitler's forces have thrown up countless barricades in Danzig—they have erected endless barbed-wire entanglements. Hitler's armored cruiser is in the Danzig harbor. Hitler's political agents, conspirators and provacateurs are operating in Danzig with a completely free hand.

In other words, all political power in Danzig today stems from Hitler, and Hitler's army, navy and air force are in full possession of the territory. If that does not constitute seizure, what on earth would?

We are accustomed to the undeclared war. And now we have witnessed the undeclared anschluss. While Downing Street has been fiddling and fuddling, hemming and hawing, Hitler has simply moved in and grabbed the disputed area.

Repealing The Neutrality Act

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I note in this morning's paper a report credited to the New York Herald Tribune that the group in Congress which fought against the alteration of the neutrality act at the last session is now prepared to reverse its position in the face of the present situation in Europe and will vote to repeal that act if a special session is called.

This report looks suspiciously like a bit of wishful thinking on the part of those who are campaigning vigorously against the hands-off policy of the United States in European affairs. However, if there is an iota of truth in this report, then the action of the men who are responsible for the drafting and passage of this legislation and for its maintenance in the face of opposition in the last session of Congress is a farce foisted upon the American people by the greatest piece of hypocrisy in the history of the United States.

The neutrality act was specifically intended for just such a situation as now exists and was designed to protect the American people from the excesses of their own folly brought about by the flood of war-inciting propaganda which has inundated the country for years and which the Dies Committee is even now pointing out officially. If the defenders of the neutrality act now reverse their position they are surely sealing their own political doom.

Any men entrusted with the powers of government who will change their whole attitude upon such a vital matter as the foreign policy of the United States at such a time can hardly be trusted with any matters of state, and I predict that the Senators who vote for the repeal of the neutrality act, after having vigorously defended it, if the matter is brought up during the present crisis, will not be returned to Congress at their next election time. They will have shown themselves utterly lacking in the qualities which have made them trustworthy public servants.

At the same time I note that Assistant Secretary of War Johnson is practically campaigning for the repeal of the arms embargo in a series of speeches over the country. For an Assistant Secretary of War to advocate the repeal of the neutrality act seems tantamount to the War Department drumming up work for the Army.

Considering such an attitude on the part of Government officials in the face of public opinion, which is certainly opposed to American participation in foreign quarrels if it can be avoided, the average citizen can only pray, "God save our country"—no one else will.

Wearing the Skirts

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It seems to me Mr. Strickland Gillilan in his reactions to the modern garb rather misses the point. Cannot he see that those shirt-tail-out men of whom he writes so entertainingly merely represent the first step in a new cycle? Women reached their present status—that is, wearing the pants of the family—by a slow process.

First, bloomers; then divided skirts, beach pajamas, sports shorts, slacks and overalls; now frank and unashamed trousers. Men's protests were futile and this year, in abject surrender, they have, themselves, turned to skirts.

That is all those shirt-tail-out costumes mean, Mr. Gillilan; the first demure budding of skirts for men. Next year they will undoubtedly wear them a little longer, perhaps about Russian tunic length. In a short time the modest man will demand skirts that hide his knees (and who could blame him?) and, finally, complete concealment of his ankles.

Some day a poet will write about his petticoats, beneath which "his toes, like little mice, creep in and out." I can even imagine a far-off future, centuries away, when the ugly menace of masculinism will again rear its head, will form a party of its own, fight for suffrage and the right to jobs, and shock the household bosses by pleading for the privilege of riding astride.

Where The Remedy Lies

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The recent wedding between Russia and Germany should have a sobering effect on thinking people. The two tyrants, having realized the essential sameness of their philosophy and objective, decided to submerge their personal differences and work for their common good—personal aggrandizement.

This incident clearly reveals the motivating immoral principles of these "isms" that "the end justifies the means." Honor, honesty, loyalty, and all the things that civilized men consider inviolable means nothing to them. Hence Christian and Jewish religions and democracy must be destroyed because they are antitheses to what they represent.

There should be no doubt in our mind as to what the real issue is. It no longer can be claimed to be communism and fascism. It is clearly an issue between Christian democracy and pagan totalitarianism. Their fervent protestation of love for the oppressed people is nothing but a colossal fake. Russia's pretention to democracy is only intended to lure misguided people into its diabolical embrace. Honest Americans have been deceived by this deceitful tactic.

We are not blind to the fact that there are defects in our political system; that there are intolerable abuses in our economic set-up; that there are wants in the midst of plenty. But we insist that the remedy to these evils does not lie in these foreign idiosyncrasies. Not in tyranny, but in liberty; not in chaotic revolution, but in orderly legislation; not in atheism, but in Christianity; not in the destruction of our civilization, but in reformation; not in totalitarianism, but in democratic Americanism.

We do not argue that other people should adopt our spiritual, political and economic faith, but we are determined that our way of life shall not vanish from this Nation.

The Bulletin Board

IT HAS BEEN like this all day, raining intermittently, in little flurries. Never very hard, yet never quite clearing off. Along the curb in front of the newspaper office one or two of the bystanders turn up their coat collars against the drizzle, but the tight little knot gathered, like swarming bees, around the bulletin board near the gray stone steps seem unconscious of the rain. They are studying the yellow slips of paper fixed to the board with a curious intentness and for the most part in silence.

Now and then a passerby joins them for a moment, asks a question, hurries on again; sometimes one stays, merges with the group. Out in the street, ever so often, a car will slow up, braving the indignant squawking of the horns behind it while the driver leans over to interrogate someone in the fringe along the curb.

A gray-haired man in a Panama hat a bit wrinkled from the weather joins the group about the board, briskly adjusting a pince-nez. He stands on tiptoe, craning, but cannot quite see above the shoulders in front of him.

"What's the news?" he inquires of the dark young man in the leather jacket.

"Anything? Have they started anything over there yet? What say?"

The other shakes his head.

"Not yet," he says.

The line along the curb becomes suddenly alert. A young man is coming out of the building with a slip of paper in his hand. A girl with a worried expression hurries along holding a folded newspaper above her hat protectively; she sees the man with the slip of paper, hesitates, returns.

And then the group relaxes again; the man with the crutches separates himself from the others, goes to lean his back against the wall. The young man is chalking up the baseball scores.

All day long, in Europe, the crowds have been waiting, too. Waiting, so the overseas dispatches say, in front of the chancelleries; in the Wilhelmstrasse, in Downing street, in the Qual d'Orsay. Watching the big, shiny limousines roll up, watching the men in top hats, the men in resplendent uniforms who climb out and go inside. Not talking very much. Swallowing nervously, with difficulty. Patient, silent crowds. German crowds and English and French and Polish crowds.

There is not much difference in the newspaper pictures. In Paris, a few more berets, perhaps. In the Wilhelmstrasse a few more caps with visors. Not many smiles anywhere. They are alike in that. Anxious-faced women. Old men, a little bewildered. Boys, enjoying the excitement, of course, but impressed, in spite of themselves, at the soberness of their elders.

Not many young men, though, in the pictures. The young men are out on the hills, marching. Out on the hills, where the caissons roll. Out on the roads choked with moving guns. Clambering into the railway carriages . . . leaning out waving good-by as the train pulls away. Dropping out of sight in the great fortifications underground, out of the daylight and the sweet upper air. All the tall young men for whom there was no place. Well, there is a place for them now.

The soldier, the sacrificial man, marching, with face averted, toward the precipice.

All day long, the news dispatches say, the anxious crowds have waited in the Wilhelmstrasse, and in Downing street, and in the Quai d'Orsay.

In front of the newspaper office the line along the curbstone has thinned out a little, changed. The man with the crutches has gone. A girl from one of the nearby shows, still with the startling, bluish stage make-up around her eyes, has joined the group surrounding the bulletin board, is studying the strips of paper closely. She seems oblivious of the covert glances she is attracting from the men near at hand.

The fringe along the curb is moving forward like a wave, closing in on the other group around the board; the young man in shirt sleeves has come out of the building again with a slip of paper, a yellow slip this time. The tight cluster at the base of the building has opened up to let him through, closed again behind him, pressing.

"What does it say," the man in the weathered Panama wants to know. "What? Has it started?"

No one answers him for a moment.

"No," the young man in the leather jacket says finally. "No, it hasn't started yet. It says there's still hope for peace."

Still hope for peace. Still hope . . .

"Men Are Thinking"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Would that all men might read your fine editorial of August 26—"Men Are Thinking." I have sent several copies to friends in other cities. Your editorials and articles are a guidance to keener analysis and understanding of present-day situations particularly when given the light of historical information.

The Versailles Treaty only righted a cruel wrong perpetrated upon Poland by Frederick II and again in 1793. That this is Hitler's aim cannot be doubted, as he is using the same tactics as applied to Sudetenland followed by partition of Czecho-Slovakia.

But, above all, your article "Men Are Thinking" should shame men like the one who signed himself "100 Per Cent American" in your letter column—for any "100 per cent American" must first of all be imbued with a freedom and humanitarianism for all peoples with a righteous indignation against the use of brute force over the less able, and with a common fellowship with all who "thought and planned and toiled together to bring our generation to the height on which we stand." No "100 per cent American" lives unto himself alone, he could not be an isolationist; his interests and his beliefs and his feelings must include all peoples in this twentieth century.

Fair Enough

Situation Complex

THE TERRIBLE WAR of nerves which has jittered the American amusement business most of this summer has come to another crisis. This struggle sums up as an attempt by George Browne, the president of the Stage Hands Union, to Sudetenize the American Federation of Actors, a small border state which has been having trouble with its parent body, the Associated Actors and Artists of America.

The situation is very complex, but in its simplest terms it represents a plan by the stage hands to pinch off this little Sudeten group and, presently, rush in and establish a protectorate over the entire territory of the four A's.

The four A's do not want to be protected or protectorated, and they, or some of them, may throw themselves into the arms of the C. I. O. in a desperate choice between two forms of dictatorship. The four As, who include all the rich stars of the screen, stage and radio, insist they are the possessors of an ancient heritage and that their history antedates that of the stage hands by many years. There were actors and singers before there were scene shifters and electricians.

Browne, however, leeringly points out that, historically, the stage hands are much older than the actors as union labor, having been chartered by the A. F. of L. in 1894. He adds that his old charter empowers his union to absorb any person whom it seems desirable.

Browne's union has an autocratic constitution which permits him to Hitlerize his followers, but it must be said that many of his followers, like many of Der Fuehrer's, point to the benefits which they have received from their dictator and do not bother their heads with democratic yearnings.

There is some secret disloyalty, of course, but dissenters are careful not to raise open opposition. In one of its branches Browne's union charges an initiation fee of $1,000 and an income tax of 10 per cent, and there is one recorded instance in which the initiation fee was boosted to $3,000.

Cannot Always Believe Dictators

FOR A LONG time the moving picture actors belonging to the four A's have been afraid that Browne had a secret intention to anschluss them. Early in 1938 their fears were confirmed when Browne's executive board claimed the right to govern the performers under the broad provisions of the stage hands' original charter. That frightened the moving picture stars, who threatened to fight to the death, whereas Browne said, in effect, that they were a lot of sissies and that he would not take them as a gift.

He wanted in his reich none but full-blooded stage hands and would not corrupt the race of stage hands by taking into his union persons who had actor blood or singer blood in them.

But you cannot always believe what a dictator says, and lately Browne has discovered that the night club talent forming the membership of the little American federation of actors are race-pure stage hands who have been isolated from their comrades all this time. He made this discovery about the time that the four A's expelled the A. F. A. and formed a new unit to embrace the members following a little dispute about union bookkeeping.

The four A's, led by the moving picture actors, flew into a patriotic fury and appealed to the American Federation of Labor, which is their league of nations, to repel this dictator, but the A. F. of L., like the League of Nations, is not very determined in such matters, so it proposed a compromise.

Meantime, however, Browne had personally issued a charter to the night-club people and claimed them for his union without consulting them at all, that being Browne's way of doing.

Anschluss Feared By Five Performers

NOW THE REMAINING members of the four A's are in panic lest Browne sweep into their territory and anschluss them. If he did that he could charge some of the stars as much as $50,000 initiation fee, and a performer earning $200,000 a year could be taxed $20,000 on the basis that is used in taxing movie camera men. Nor is there any reason why he would have to stop at 10 per cent income tax. He might tax them 50 per cent. That would still leave a $200,000 star $100,000 with which to pay commissions, annuities and State and Federal taxes. Anyway, Mr. Browne doesn't have to consult anybody in fixing his initiation fees or tax rates.

The Sudeten movement in the night club set started almost a year ago. It was not an open agitation for anschluss, but the four A's felt, nevertheless, that there was a Henlein at work in this border province whipping up agitation for Mr. Browne and the stage hands.

The four A's have been shouting treason and denouncing Mr. Browne for unprovoked aggression, but he says that under his old charter the formation of the actors' unions was an act of aggression against his reich. Therefore, he is just correcting a historical error.

The unfortunate actors have one hope. The Department of Justice has lately begun an investigation of Mr. Brown's union, including the career of Mr. Willie Bioff, personal representative of Mr. Browne, who had some interesting adventures in Chicago in the hoodlum days of Al Capone and left his name on the guest books of the Chicago Police Department.

Mrs. Roosevelt Christens S.S. America at Newport News

By Edward T. Folliard

Post Staff Writer.

Newport News, Va., Aug. 31.—A great maroon-colored liner, trim as a yacht and destined to be a queen, rode in the James River this evening, symbol of Uncle Sam's comeback as a maritime power.

She bears the name "America," and her launching just before noon, in the words of President Roosevelt, signified the early return of the United States merchant fleet "to a dominant position on the oceans of the world."

"The tense state of the international situation," the President said in a message, "makes it particularly desirable that we have a merchant fleet capable of carrying our commerce if and when foreign ships are withdrawn, and, should the unfortunate necessity arise, of serving as the necessary supply force for naval vessels."

The $16,000,000 liner, largest and fastest passenger ship ever built in the United States, was sent down the greased ways of the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who crashed a bottle of Ohio-made champagne against her towering prow.

"I christen thee 'America,'" cried the First Lady, jumping back as the wine ricocheted toward her Eleanor-blue frock.

A band played a patriotic air, sirens screamed and an airplane roared overhead as the America, flags whipping from her stern, splashed into the historic James.

Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, United States Navy (retired), chairman of the United States Maritime Commission, and the man who is directing the Nation's ten-year program of 500 new merchant ships, looked on the spectacle with unrestrained pride, much as seafaring Yankees must have watched the launching of the Flying Cloud, the Game Cock, and th Red Jacket back in the clipper days, America's "golden era" of shipping.

Vicariously, President Roosevelt held to his desk in Washington by the European crisis, experienced the same emotion as the new queen of the United States lines took on life.

"The launching of the America," the President said in a message read by Mrs. Roosevelt, "gives me the greatest personal satisfaction.

"It is one of the most important events to take place in the world this year.

"When the maritime commission was created in 1936 our merchant fleet had lapsed into a lamentable state. New construction of ocean-going vessels had virtually ceased following the war and the average remaining economic life of the merchant fleet was less than five years.

"Now that situation is changed. Contracts will have been let for approximately 100 ships by the end of this year. Eighteen other ships have been launched.

"The program of 500 ships within ten years which has been developed by the commission and approved by the Executive with consideration of our national defense as well as our commercial needs, is one of which the Nation can fairly be proud and in which every citizen has a direct interest."

Navy experts had a hand in designing the America, making provision for gun placements and the like. Should this country get into a war the liner would become a valuable naval auxiliary, serving as a transport or, perhaps, an aircraft carrier.

The President emphasized the national defense angle, saying: "You and I know, from our work during the war, the disabilities of a navy which lacks an adequate merchant fleet. With all its enormous potential combat power, such a navy is tied to its land bases."

Admiral Land, in a speech before the launching, also discussed the America's value as a unit in the national defense, saying:

"We hope—indeed we pray—that circumstances requiring her use for the latter purpose may be avoided. But if they arise, this able ship can do her part.

"But more than this, I like to think of her as a symbol leading us on to a revival of that great maritime tradition which reached its peak in the clipper fleet of the last century. It is to that tradition that we must return if the United States is to resume its proper place among the maritime nations of the world.

"The ship we are launching today will enter the most highly competitive service in the world, namely, the North Atlantic from New York to English and European ports. And I would like to emphasize today that about 70 out of every 100 Americans crossing via this route, travel on foreign-flag ships.

"I can think of no more appropriate occasion than this to urge everyone within my hearing to urge, in turn, everyone with whom they come in contact to "travel and ship under the American flag."

The war threat in Europe was never out of mind during the launching. Thus John M. Franklin, president of the United States Lines, after telling how the America would join his company's Manhattan and Washington, said:

"The fact that the Manhattan is sailing today from Havre and Southampton with 2,000 Americans who otherwise would be stranded in Europe is the best possible example of the importance of this type of tonnage."

Matrons of honor at the launching were Mrs. Emory S. Land and Mrs. Basil Harris, wife of the vice president of the United States Lines. A crowd of 20,000, including hundreds of huskies who helped build the America, cheered as the vessel slid down the ways.

The America is not a "super liner," the Maritime Commission having officially frowned on such $50,000,000 vessels as "window dressing" and too vulnerable to submarines and airplanes.

She is much smaller than the Queen Mary and the Normandie, and also smaller than the fondly remembered Leviathan, whose place she takes. But is said to be the safest ship ever built in this or any other country. She has a displacement of 34,000 tons, is 723 feet long—a super liner is 1,000 feet or more in length—and she will carry 1,219 passengers and a crew of 639. She will make a speed of 22 knots.

The Maritime Commission has five other passenger liners projected, three for the Orient trade and two for the "good neighbor" fleet that plies to South America.

The Armed Ship Issue

By Ernest K. Lindley

Roosevelt Explains

IN EXPLAINING the meticulous inspection of the Bremen, the President seems to have taken a flying leap into the middle of a bed of thistles. One of the prickliest questions with which this Government had to deal during the World War of 1914-18, and probably will have to deal during another world war, was the status of armed merchantmen.

Some international lawyers of eminence hold, in fact, that it was our departure from established practice in dealing with armed merchantmen which set us on the path to war.

As to the Bremen incident, itself, the President's explanation left some of his experts in a state of amused bewilderment. Out of loyalty they are compelled to be discreet. But they know that the President's sense of humor would permit him, even in such times as these, to have a little fun at the expense of the Nazis. And his explanation could be interpreted as satire on the sophistries which Berlin so often summons to its uses.

The President referred solemnly to the Alabama Case and his responsibility for protecting the United States against claims for damages. The Alabama and the other vessels involved in the claims known as the "Alabama Case" were built and in some instances fitted for war purposes in British and Australian shipyards, and thereupon turned over to the Confederacy.

Neither the terms of the award in the Alabama Case nor the Treaty of Washington on which it was based seem to give any reason for worrying about our Treasury even if the Bremen should become a raider after leaving our ports.

In the first place, there was no war while the Bremen was in our territorial waters. In the second place, even if war had been declared, our responsibility as a "neutral" presumably would have been only to see that the Bremen was not altered for war purposes or equipped with arms while in our waters.

Treasury Seems To Be Safe Enough

WHAT IF, AS a result of the delay in New York, the Bremen does not get home before war breaks out and is captured by British destroyers? Would our Government then be liable to the German government for damages? The Treasury seems to be safe enough from an attack on this front, also. For there was no doubt about the legal authority of our customs, immigration, and steamship inspectors to search and test to Mr. Roosevelt's content. And the fact that the merchant vessels of other nations were subjected to similar, if less rigorous, tests is a further safeguard.

For centuries until the World War, armed merchant ships were regarded as warships. This custom was upset by our Government during the World War. We permittted armed merchant ships by the hundreds to enter and leave our ports.

What is more important, we not only treated them as unarmed ships ourselves but insisted that German submarines should do so. The central point in the whole submarine controversy with Germany was the torpedoing without warning of the merchant vessels of belligerent nations. Most of these vessels were armed, and eventually nearly all of them were armed.

The Germans argued that their submarines were obliged to attack without warning because the belligerent merchant ships were equipped with weapons capable of sinking submarines.

In January, 1916, Secretary of State Lansing—avidly pro-ally though he was—became convinced that the Germans were right on this point. He prepared and President Wilson approved a modus vivendi whereby the allies would agree to disarm their merchant ships, and the Germans, in turn, would agree in their submarine operations to adhere strictly to the rules of international law concerning stopping and searching and the removal of the passengers and crews to places of safety before sinking the vessels as prizes of war.

Plan Dropped As Britain Protests

THIS PLAN WAS promptly dropped when the British protested. Does the President's concern about the Bremen portend a return to the old precedents of international law, by which an armed merchant ship is classed as a warship? Apparently not, because he went on to draw a distinction (without defining it) between a vessel that is armed defensively and one that is armed offensively. So he landed in the thornbush in which we got caught once before.

If anything, the bush is even thornier than it was a quarter of a century ago. For since then we have seen the perfection of the aerial bombardment. Modern anti-aircraft guns can be used to sink submarines or to attack unarmed merchant vessels quite as readily as to shoot at airplanes.

There is no convincing distinction between offensive and defensive weapons on a ship. This is recognized by our existing neutrality legislation. Under this law, American vessels engaged in commerce with a nation at war are flatly prohibited from carrying any arms whatsoever except small arms and ammunition deemed necessary for the preservation of discipline. Another section of the law compels the President to prohibit submarines and armed merchant vessels, alike, from entering our territorial waters.

The President's press conference remarks were more in the nature of an extemporaneous composition, apparently, than an outline of a considered policy.

On The Record

By Dorothy Thompson

It Was Bound To Happen

A FRIEND REMARKED whimsically the other day: "If this situation finally results in a major war, the result will be that afterward there will be practically no governments at all. The man in the street will be absolutely convinced that he has more sense than any government. All officials will be regarded as the lowest form of human life, decisions will probably be taken by Gallup Polls, and disrespect for the state will be universal."

My friend, who is not a follower of Henry Thoreau, did not think this condition of affairs desirable. He believes in government; he rightly thinks such a condition would be anarchy.

But certainly the so-called "common people," meaning people, are beginning at last to think again about the long-neglected question which is at the root of all government—namely, the question of the nature and distribution of power.

Certainly they do not phrase the issue in such terms. They are not political philosophers. But they observe a fantastic phenomenon.

They observe that the world is on the verge of embarking upon something that nobody wants to do, for no purpose that can possibly be explained, for no end that can possibly be justified.

They observe that by reason of a course of events that everybody has been watching and conscious of and few people worrying much about, the decision over the life and death of millions of people, the decision of whether the buildings they have built shall continue to stand, of whether the wealth they have produced shall be used to make human life more comfortable, beautiful and secure, or used for an orgy of universal destruction—this decision, Godlike or satanic in its naked power, rests in the hands of one man.

THE QUESTION is asked: "Will Hitler conquer the world?"

The answer is: He is already master of the world.

He already has the power of life and death not only over the Germans but over Czechs, and Poles, and Hungarians, and South Slavs, and Englishmen, and Frenchmen, and Italians.

Power Stretches Around The Globe

MORE REMOTELY, his power stretches over the personal lives of everyone on this globe. The economic life of every nation is affected. The last farmer and mechanic in Idaho or Indiana pays tribute from his work, to contribute a bolt or a cog to another tank or another bomber—because of the man.

Humanity waits for its doom or its relief while the man communes with himself and his cohorts. We read that he is not feeling very well and perhaps may take a long rest—and our spirits rise.

We read that he is in splendid form—and our spirits sink. The journalists, publicists, diplomats of the whole world concentrate their energies on nothing else whatsoever except reporting and responding to the moods, the whims of one man.

Communication With Him Is Impossible

COMMUNICATION WITH him is impossible in any language. Words have lost their meaning. The British and Polish governments use the words "negotiate" and "mediate." The words in Nazi mean "capitulate," and the man is willing to accept the capitulation. The acceptance of capitulation is called compromise in Nazi.

Since words do not communicate any meaning, the world resorts to signals. Children are evacuated from British and French cities; street lights are dimmed; the British Stock Exchange is closed; armies are mobilized; fleets are moved; millions of pounds sterling are transferred. It is all a gigantic wig-wagging operation to get through to the man an idea: There is still other power.

But what will that idea do to the satanic god who now is power?

The totalitarianism of power in one country moves inexorably to totality of all power. The least retreat and the internal power is challenged. The least weakening of the man's power means destruction for the thousands who are the robot instruments of that power—the hundreds of thousands of "Elite Guards," "Storm Troopers," "Block Watchers," "Gestapo," "Civil Servants." None dares break away from the center of power, for if he breaks away he is broken in the moment.

In a quiet moment, one asks: How did this come about and who is to blame?

Everybody.

All those who, because they believed and longed for some Utopia, followed some dream of perfection, forgot the first commandment of the decalogue.

The "liberals" and "progressives," in all countries, who have concerned themselves with every other question except the question of power.

The conservatives, lovers of power, who have failed to ask themselves how much power is good for any corporation and in what direction will assaults on power go?

The communists, who in their zeal for "equality" have concerned themselves with every question except the one of power.

Where now is their great comrade? The Original despote whom they have so abjectly worshiped, calling the state which he absolutely and totally owns a "modern democracy?" A state which is a medieval serf kingdom led by the inscrutable one who, in his infinite wisdom and love for the people, can do no wrong.

Coldly, he who understands the nature of power follows the inexorable necessity to unite and grab.

The man was also, once just a man. He is 50 years old; he has, no doubt, a malfunctioning of the pituitary gland which has given him one great personal frustration. He has a prodigious imagination, undisciplined by great artistic talent and uncontrolled by education. He is supremely ignorant.

All His Glamour Heaped Upon Him

ALL THE POWER he has accumulated to him; all the glamour he has was heaped upon him—the incorporation of the frustrations of others, the incorporation of the dreams of others. The way was always prepared for him. It was prepared by those who wanted "universal security," "the breaking of the power of great corporations and the ending of servitude to interest," the "ending of unemployment—the things we all want. But how? By what means? By what instruments of power? That was always the issue.

To make a little better and more intelligent and just world requires infinite patience, labor, thought, character—the co-operation of all the numerous groups of society—society, which is organism and something different from the state, which is organization and coercion.

But, people thought, there must be a formula. There is a formula for everything—a serum for smallpox; an injection for diabetes; an alchemy for the transmutation of metals.

Some one had a social formula. "Let him try it." "Give him a mandate!" Put all power into the hands of the state—"all power to the people's Soviets!"—the Soviets being merely a system for passing power under rigid control from one instance to another until it finally lands totally in the hands of a single, an indestructible, authority.

Even more nakedly, "all power to the people's fuehrer!" That was the beginning.

Political Scientists Run After Utopias

WHAT HAS CONCERNED all the great political philosophers of all time; what concerned Moses, Plato, Aristotle, St. Thomas Aquinas, Machiavelli, Mill, Montesquieu and Alexander Hamilton — the problem of uower, the problem of checks and balances to power—this has ceased to concern our "intellectuals" for a generation now. Even in our universities, with a few exceptions, we have no political philosophy. Instead, we have had "economics"—and the psychoanalysis of politics and politicians.

Our "political scientists" have been running after Utopias, hailing "blanket mandates," charting "inexorable trends," "running with the grain of history"—and steering us all, everywhere, toward the total state, which mounts up step by step into the total power, uniquely incorporated. Not toward the federation of man but toward the corporation of the world—with a President appointed for life, and unremovable.

What is happening now was bound to happen.

Rosh Hashanah Message Pledges Aid to Democracy

"To preserve and defend the ideals and institutions of American democracy, to champion justice and to uphold righteousness will be among the paramount objectives of American Jewry during the coming year, in common with all men and women of good will who are determined to resist the enemies of our civilization," Henry Monsky, president of B'nai B'rith, declared yesterday in his annual Rosh Hahanah (Jewish New Year) message.

Speaking in the name of 125,000 members of B'nai B'rith and its affiliates, Monsky said that "difficult as was the outgoing year, we draw comfort from the unprecedented outpouring of material assistance and moral sustenance to the victims of persecution; the revival of spiritual and cultural values, and the fervent renewal of faith in and devotion to democracy as a way of life."

The Hebrew year 5,700 will be ushered in at sundown on September 13.

Equal Spanish War Pensions, V.F.W. Asks U.S.

Boston, Aug. 31 (AP).—Resolutions demanding that World War veterans receive pensions equivalent to those awarded Spanish-American War veterans were adopted today at the fortieth annual convention of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The proposal would give veterans a pension upon reaching the age of 65, provided they had received honorable discharges and had served 90 days. At the same time, disabled veterans would be given pensions on a graduated scale, depending on the degree of their disability.

Paul C. Wohlman, of Baltimore, a former national commander of the organization, opposed the demand for a straight pension after 65, declaring it was "not an opportune time" and that it might impair efforts to seek increases for disabled veterans.

"Popper, where is Danzig?"

"Who?"

"Danzig."

"Why, er, Danzig is, er, it's in Poland. It's a free city."

"What's a free city, popper?"

"Ahem. Why, ahem—a free city is a city where everything is free."

"Does that include gasoline and oil?"

"Run along! The boy next door is whistling for you."

"Popper, what is the Polish Corridor?"

"Don't you know what corridor is?"

"It's a thing where you put cigars to keep 'em dry, ain't it?"

"No, you're thinking of a humidor. This is a corridor: A corridor is a hallway. The Polish Corridor is a hallway through Poland, I think."

"What's all the trouble over?"

"Oh, you know how hallways get all cluttered up and dangerous."

"Cluttered up with what?"

"Kiddie cars, bicycles, umbrella stands, sleds, hat hangers, toys and all that sort of junk. G'wan out and play ball!"

"How long has there been a Polish Corridor, popper?"

"About 20 years. A corridor can get into an awful mess in that time."

"Did it once belong to Germany?"

"As far as I can figure out, everything except Tibet, Alaska, Coney Island and the Brooklyn Baseball Club once belonged to Germany, my son. The boy across the street is calling to you."

"Where is Slovakia?"

"You'll find it on the map."

"What map, popper?"

"Any good fresh map. They come out every 24 hours now."

"Where are these places called Estonia and Latvia, popper?"

"Oh, they're right around somewhere. Don't you ever look for anything yourself?"

"Popper, what are the Goslow states I hear so much about on the radio?"

"You mean the Oslo states."

"Where are they?"

"They're in the Balkans or the Skagerrak or some place like that. The kids are choosing up sides out in he back yard. They want you to pitch."

"Popper, where is Memel?"

"Where is what?"

"Memel."

"Ask your mother; she had it last!"

Policeman Fatally Shot At His Home

Russell Harris, 30, Found in Bathroom With Service Pistol At His Side

A Washington policeman was found shot and fatally wounded last night shortly after he had taken his wife and two children out to supper.

HARRIS

The dead man is Russell Allen Harris, 30, of 1414 G street southeast, a t-tached to Fifth Precinct Station. He died at Casualty Hospital shortly after a shot had been fired through his head in the bathroom of his home. His service revolver was found at the policeman's side.

Police said that Harris, who had been on sick leave and was due back to scout car duty today, returned to his home with his wife, Mary, and two sons, Donald, 6, and Russell, jr., 8, after dining out. Harris then said he was going to bed with the children, while Mrs. Harris stepped downstairs to speak with a neighbor. Harris reappeared fully clothed, according to police investigators, said he planned to go out for a walk, and stepped into the bathroom. On hearing a shot, Mrs. Harris rushed to the room to find her husband fatally wounded.

Harris had served with the police department for four years, all with the Fifth Precinct Station. Only yesterday he had learned that he was to rejoin the ranks as private, first class, and that a $100 raise had been approved.

He had earned the commendation of Acting Secretary of the Navy Edison for his work in clearing the heavy traffic at the christening of the Yankee Clipper at Bolling Field.

For the last several months, however, ill luck had been dogging him. He suffered a painful injury April 10 in arresting a woman on a drunkenness charge when she resisted police. Shortly afterward, Harris' hand was severely lacerated when bitten by a woman as he attempted to stop a street quarrel. He suffered a fractured finger on the same hand when the jack slipped as he was repairing his auto a week later.

Harris had been forced to take sick leave for more than a month.

A native of Washington, Harris, according to police, was a graduate of St. Joseph's Parochial and Eastern High schools. Before joining the force he was a clerk for an express company.

Capital News In Brief

FWA to Hear Union Case

Alan Johnston, general counsel for the Federal Works Agency, has been named by Federal Works Administrator Carmody to look into union complaints against the dismissal of Morton Friedman, president of the WPA union, from the WPA staff during the layoffs of last month.

WPA Union, Local No. 1, of the United Federal Workers of America, charged last month that Friedman's dismissal was a result of union discrimination and demanded his reinstatement. The case reached Col. F. C. Harrington, WPA chief, who ruled against the union, with the statement there was no evidence of discrimination. Johnstone will meet with a union committee to discuss the grievance.

Bird Bites Policeman

Whether it was a duck or a crane or a blue heron, amateur ornithologists at the Fourth Precinct Station can't decide.

When Private W. W. Knox saw the bird at First and P streets southwest as he cruised along in a scout car, he thought it was a duck. The bird was injured, and he took it to the stationhouse.

At Precinct 4 headquarters an officer declared it was a crane. He started to pet it, was bitten, and called it other names.

Last night, Octave Bigoness, a lawyer, entered the stationhouse, saw the bird, declared it a blue heron, and took it away to his farm near Glen Arbor, Md.

Six Landlords Bilked

Another variation of the skin game was uncovered by Metropolitan police detectives yesterday.

The skinner: A colored woman about 20.

Her method: To go to colored homes, posing as a social service worker. When she discovered a family that owed rent she found out the name of the real estate firm to which the money was owed. Approaching the firm, she offered to pay a month's rent, presenting a check for a larger amount, and requesting change in cash.

The skinned: Six real estate companies in the past 10 days after her checks bounced.

Beer Permit Denied

The Alcoholic Beverage Control Board yesterday denied for the second time an application by Peter Harris for a permit to sell beer and wine at 501 C street northeast.

The application was denied, according to Thomas E. Lodge, chairman of the A. B. C. board, because the property is directly opposite the Peabody School. Residents and P.-T. A. spokesmen objected to the request.

'Will a Man Rob God?'

Dr. Howard Stone Anderson, pastor of First Congregational Church, Tenth and G streets northwest, will return to the pulpit Sunday with a sermon on "Will a Man Rob God?"

The topic, it was announced, was suggested by robbery of the church office and pastor's study last July.

Paul Edwards To Head WPA For District

Arts Project Chief Will Succeed to Post Vacated by Allen

Paul Edwards, who for the last two years has been co-ordinator of federal arts projects in New York City, yesterday was appointed WPA administrator for the District to fill the vacancy created by the resignation of Commissioner George E. Allen early this summer.

Edwards will replace on September 15 George Parker, who has been acting administrator since Allen quit. Parker will return to Jackson, Miss., to become assistant State WPA administrator.

No further shakeup in the local WPA is anticipated, it was said, other than to bring the District into line with general national retrenchments.

Since July 1 there have been dropped 3,200 WPA workers, 47 administrative employes, and 150 supervisors and technical personnel.

Edwards, whose appointment was announced by Howard O. Hunter, assistant WPA director, is 36 years old and a graduate of the University of California. Before going to New York he was acting WPA administrator for Massachusetts.

Since Congress curtailed WPA appropriations for arts projects, the task of co-ordinating them has been turned over to the States and cities by the Federal WPA.

New Section Of Skyline Drive Opened

New Link Adds 31 Miles To Southern End of Shenandoah Park

By the Associated Press

Waynesboro, Va., Aug. 31.—A 31-mile link of the Skyline Drive in the southern section of the Shenandoah National Park, and a connecting 8-mile section of the Blue Ridge Parkway from Swift Run Gap to Rockfish Gap were opened to the public today for the first time.

The additional 39 miles makes 105 miles of the Skyline Drive-Blue Ridge Parkway open to the public.

Grading is underway on another section south of Rockfish Gap to Humpback Mountain.

James R. Lassiter, superintendent of the Shenandoah National Park, commenting recently on the Skyline Drive, said the south section was "distinctly different" from the north and central sections.

"The terrain," he added, "is more rugged and generally the mountains pile up to obscure more distant panoramas, except at intervals where they are glimpsed through notches and ravines."

The newly opened section is reached via the Skyline Drive from the north, or United States Route 33 from the east and west at Swift Run Gap, and from United States Route 250 at Rockfish Gap, three miles east of Waynesboro.

Street Work To Be Cut Next Year

Department Asks For Less Money Than It Got in 1940 Appropriation

Street widening and paving next fiscal year will fall far below the pace of the past two years, it was disclosed yesterday as the highway department asked $285,500 less for 1941 than it received in current appropriations.

The reason for this unusual request, it was explained, was a falling off in revenue available. Customarily municipal departments ask for more in their estimate than they received in appropriations.

Maj. Daniel J. Donovan, auditor, explained that no decrease in revenue from the gasoline tax is expected, and that the slump in the highway fund is due to the fact that a large surplus created by the 1938 revenue act has disappeared. A $40,000 deficit is anticipated for the present fiscal year.

No New Major Projects

Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, pointed out in a report to the Commissioners that the paving and street widening fund, including the $635,000 Federal highway aid grant, will be $420,000 less than the amount available this year.

No new major highway or street projects are included in the 1941 estimates. Funds are requested to complete the Pennsylvania avenue and Massachusetts avenue bridges.

Local paving estimates are $80,000 below 1940 appropriations; major thoroughfare improvements are off $108,000, and roadway widening will take a drop of $137,500. Offsetting this somewhat is an additional $75,000 for the Massachusetts avenue bridge.

Added Personnel Asked

The department of vehicles and traffic submitted estimates totaling $374,250 as compared with $342,670 in current appropriations. Seven new positions are requested, including as information clerk at $2,000 to show the public where to get permits, etc.

Twenty-four new traffic lights will be installed if the funds are appropriated, although traffic surveys show that there are 150 intersections where the signals would be justified, according to William A. Van Duzer, traffic director.

Courts Seek More

The Juvenile Court asked for $127,780, an increase of $29,590, to pay for 13 more jobs, 8 of which would be for probation officers. Understaffing, the report said, has crippled the activities of the court.

The Police Court asked $109,000 or a gain of $3,480, to pay for an additional bailiff and an assistant financial clerk.

The Municipal Court's estimates are $89,480 as compared with an appropriation of $87,620. The $1,860 is solely for pay step-ups, no additional personnel being requested.

Husband Shoots Wife and Self After Quarrel

She Is Expected to Live, but His Wounds May Prove Fatal

Climaxing an early morning argument, Edwin R. McEntee, 37, unemployed law student, shot and painfully wounded his pretty 26-year-old wife and then seriously wounded himself, with two shots into his chest and arm, yesterday.

McEntee chased his wife, Mrs. Elsie N. McEntee, from their first-floor rooms to a basement apartment at 1622 P street northwest, where he fired at her through a glass door, police reported.

Shot in the shoulder from behind, Mrs. McEntee managed to get to a taxi and was taken to Emergency Hospital. Police followed with her husband a short time later.

His Note Is Found

Doctors said Mrs. McEntee probably would recover, the bullet passing through her shoulder and lodging in her neck, apparently without striking a vital organ. McEntee's condition was serious, physicians said. One bullet entered his chest just above the heart.

Police found a long note signed by McEntee in the couple's apartment. He explained in detail apparent marital difficulties. The note was addressed to the Police Department and said: "Last statement of Edwin R. McEntee." Signed by him, it bore the time of 3 a. m.

Argument Precedes Shooting

Residents of the boarding house told police that the McEntees had been heard arguing and that she fled their rooms. He chased her to the basement apartment of Mr. and Mrs. Milton Finley. Before Mrs. McEntee could close the door, McEntee fired. When she staggered, he shot himself.

Bullets narrowly missed the Finleys, their 3-year-old daughter, Peggy Lou, and a friend, Miss Jean Ledman, 21, of 1743 Q street northwest, who were sitting in the room.

Housing Authority Named For Montgomery County

Brooke Lee Made Chairman of Group; Mrs. Clapper, Dr. Bird, Jo Morgan And T. C. Darby Complete Membership

Preparatory to making application for Federal funds for construction of small homes in the rural section of Montgomery County, the Montgomery County Commissioners yesterday named a housing authority for the county.

Maj. E. Brooke Lee, of Silver Spring, was named chairman of the housing authority. Other members are Mrs. Raymond Clapper, of Chevy Chase; Dr. J. W. Bird, of Sandy Spring; Jo V. Morgan, of Edgemoor, and Thomas C. Darby, of Darnestown.

The commissioners said they believed the authority would result in construction of a number of Federally financed small houses in the rural sections of Montgomery County.

"The Housing Authority in Washington has declared a number of times recently in the press that they plan such rural projects and we regard agricultural Montgomery County as an ideal location. We hope the result will be a substantial number of well-built, modern small homes that can be rented to the citizens of Montgomery County whose earnings now limit them to rent payments of $6 to $12 per month," the commissioners declared.

Maj. Lee, formerly was Democratic speaker of the Maryland House of Delegates, a member of the Maryland roads commission, State comptroller, secretary of state and has held a number of other important State offices. He had a leading part in the planning of the county's schools, parks and road system.

Mrs. Clapper, wife of the newspaper columnist, is a past president of the League of Women Voters of Montgomery County and now is vice president of the Independent League of Maryland. She also has been active in welfare work in the county.

Dr. Bird is president of the Montgomery County Social Service League and head of the Montgomery County General Hospital as well as a prominent physician of the county. Darby is president of the Farm Credit Agency for Montgomery and Frederick counties.

County officials and employes are prohibited from being members of the authority.

D.C. Family Trying To Leave London

Mrs. George H. Lynch with her daughters, Joan, 15, and Robin, 7, was trying to leave London yesterday to return home to Washington, according to word received here by her husband.

A legal consultant for the Veterans' Administration, Lynch said that his family had reservations to return from abroad in the middle of September. They live at 3028 Forty-fifth street northwest.

Lions to Dance

The Arlington, Va., Lions Club will sponsor a dance tomorrow night at the Washington Golf and Country Club. Dancing will start at 10 o'clock.

Shingler Is Honored

A farewell luncheon was given to Capt. Don G. Shingler, retiring Assistant Engineer Commissioner, by his colleagues in the District Building at the Harrington Hotel yesterday. Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen and Capt. Patrick Tansey, Acting Engineer Commissioner, spoke.

Zoning Permits Denied to Two

The Board of Zoning Adjustments yesterday denied appeals of applicants for rezoning to permit establishment of a nursery school and an old ladies' home.

The appeals, which were fought at hearings by adjacent property owners, had been filed by M. Francis Burns on behalf of Green Acres School, Inc., and Sallie H. Weller, respectively. The school was to be opened at 4616 Verplanck place northwest and the ladies' home at 1500 Farragut street northwest.

Submitting its first annual report to the Commissioners, the board said it had disposed of 134 appeals and had held 22 hearings during the fiscal year ended June 30. The board was created in June, 1938.

"The experience of the board," the report said, "leads to the conclusion that the appeal procedure under the new zoning act and regulations is satisfactory to the majority of the citizens who have appeared before the board."

Sand Strike Peace Talk Slated Today

'Definite Headway' Made Toward Settlement, U.S. Labor Conciliator Says

Howard T. Colvin, Labor Department conciliator, last night reported "definite headway" in efforts to settle the Smoot Sand & Gravel Co. strike, but declined to comment on current developments.

It was learned, however, that John R. Steelman, director of conciliation, contacted Lewis E. Smoot, chairman of the company's board of directors, in an effort to arrange a conference. It was expected the conference would be held sometime today.

Smoot is ill at his summer home near Colonial Beach and, according to union representatives, has refused to delegate an authorized agent of the company to conduct negotiations. The three-week strike has held up $54,000,000 worth of construction in Washington.

Colvin said also that although several meetings were held yesterday in connection with the plumbers dispute, no conclusions were reached.

Week's Prize Recipes Show How Can Opener May Save the Day

Consomme, Salmon On Blue Ribbon Menu

Packaged and Frosted Foods Now Available in Rich Variety at Modest Cost; Tinned Fish Makes Fine Loaf

By The Post Food Editor

A GENERATION ago the can opener was the subject of much ridicule. Today it is the answer to a hurry-up cook's prayer, and if not used, it is thought that the cook is not making the best of her opportunities. Canned, packaged and frosted foods are a household blessing and the wealth of these foods which is available at a moderate cost is amazing. Today one may enjoy almost every kind of fruit, vegetable, meat, and fish or game in any part of the world, at any season, because of the distribution of foods in cans and packages.

The contestants in this week's Post recipe contest show that they are familiar with the contents of the goods on the grocers' shelves. Their menus, which were developed from canned and packaged goods, are neither commonplace nor casual, but show all the sophistication of a meal which has taken considerable time to prepare.

Farewell to Summer

Mrs. Herbert Whiting Gardner, 29 East Woodbine street, Chevy Chase, Md., gets the blue ribbon in this week's Post recipe contest and an award of $3. Mrs. Gardner identifies her delicious luncheon pattern as a "Farewell to Summer Luncheon," made from canned and packaged goods, but a meal of such merit is one that should not be consigned to the inactive recipe file when warm days are at an end. This meal will also be a rousing good cold weather one when the consomme and coffee are served steaming hot instead of iced. Following is the menu and recipe for the main dish, Salmon Delmonico, as given by Mrs Gardner.

MRS. GARDNER

To make the ring: Combine 4 cups hot boiled rice (1 cup dry rice), 1-3 cup minced green pepper, 1-3 cup minced parsely and ¼ cup melted butter. Press into a greased ring mold and heat in hot oven—400 degrees—about 10 minutes. Unmold ring, fill with hot Salmon Delmonico, garnish and serve.

After Golf Scramble

When people are golf fans they often come home late with ravenous appetites. Mrs. John W. Nesbitt has such a problem in her household which she takes care of in an interesting way, with a main dish she calls Foo Chow Scramble. Her menu is one that does not require much scrambling, although it produces a dish by that name. For this excellent menu and recipe Mrs. Nesbitt wins the second prize of $2. Following is the after golf menu, together with the recipe for Foo Chow Scramble.

Sea Dream Cheese Salad Gives Cool Feeling at Sight

Colors have certain traits that are universally sensed. The green of the grass or leaves, the green of the ocean, green salads, beverages and desserts—all give one a feeling of coolness at sight. Remember this when serving meals. A cool looking salad attracts—a cool tasting salad delights. A carefully balanced green salad is ideal for the early fall days, particularly when the thermometer is still too high for comfort.

Sea Dream Cheese Salad

One package lime-flavored gelatin, 1 cup hot water, 1 cup grated cucumber, 1 tablespoon vinegar, ½ teaspoon scraped onion, dash of cayenne, ½ teaspoon salt, 1 package (3 ounces) cream cheese, ¼ cup sliced green pepper, 1 cup diced celery.

Dissolve gelatin in hot water. Add cucumber, vinegar, onion, cayenne and salt. Force through sieve. Chill. When slightly thickened add ½ to softened cream cheese. Fold in green pepper and celery, turn into individual molds and chill until firm. Fill molds with remaining thickened gelatin mixture. Chill until firm. Unmold on crisp lettuce. Garnish with mayonnaise, if desired. Serves six.

Cucumbers and cream cheese combine to make a gelatin mold which is just the thing for a cool looking and tasting salad. Made in individual ring molds, served on lettuce and the centers filled with cucumbers and mayonnaise, you have a distinctive and appealing salad service.

Peel and slice 1 large cucumber; marinate in French dressing and chill. Soften 1 tablespoon gelatin in ½ cup water, dissolve over hot water. Blend 3 packages cream cheese, salt and pepper, ½ teaspoon chopped onion and 2 tablespoons chopped green pepper together. Fold into the cooled gelatin. Pour into individual ring molds and chill. Unmold on lettuce and fill the centers of the ring with drained salted cucumbers. Serve with mayonnaise.

Chocolate Sauce Lends Zip to Pears

Given 6 fresh pears, 2 cups corn flakes, ½ cup pecan meats and a tablespoon of lemon juice, a delightful dessert can be developed. Serve with chocolate sauce and the combination will be excellent.

Pare and core 6 pears. Cook in a small amount of water with 1 tablespoon lemon juice added. Drain and roll in the 2 cups crushed corn flakes and ½ cup chopped nut meats. Place 2 halves in each serving dish. Serve with hot chocolate sauce, made by melting 2 tablespoons butter. Add ¼ cup sugar, few grains of salt and ¼ cup cocoa. Add 1 cup milk and cool over low heat until thick, stirring constantly. Add vanilla extract. Serves six.

If you really want to make something special, this is the right time of the year to make a dessert from pears and pistachio gelatin. A ripe eating pear is cored, placed in a sherbet glass, treated to a squeeze of lemon juice and stuffed with cherries and pecans. Pistachio gelatin is poured into the cavity until it rises to the desired height in the glass. Then mask the upper part of the pear with gelatin that has been cooled and ornament with a cherry surrounded by a circle of pecan meats. To be successful the pears must be entirely ripe. It may be served with or without cream.

Soap Jelly Cleans House Furnishings

Many washable furnishings cannot be put into the tub or washer, either because of their size or bulk or because it is best to keep them as nearly dry as possible. For such things household economists have evolved soap jelly, a practically dry preparation made by dissolving shaved bar soap, packaged soap, or soap scraps in boiling water and letting the mixture stand until it jells. Shampooing with dry suds is a household art which an increasing number of women are finding satisfactory because it makes for greater cleanliness.

Tomato Queen Picks Sherbet As Her Dish

W. Va. Festival to Serve 'Love Apple' In Many Forms

Tomatoes are not merely a run-of-the garden vegetable in West Virginia. To honor the "love apple" the third annual tomato festival is to be held at Berkeley Springs, W. Va., September 2, 3 and 4.

Tomatoes will be served in many forms, from raw to juices and soups, it was learned from persons planning the menus of the luncheons and dinners which will be served at social functions of the festival.

Miss Izetta Jewel, jr., young actress who has played in summer theater in Washington, will reign as Queen Morgan III at this fete. When asked how she preferred her tomatoes she said that she thought a Tomato Sherbet a delightful accompaniment to meat courses.

One of the menus of the functions will feature such a sherbet. Here is how it is made:

Tomato Sherbet

Soak 2 teaspoons gelatin in ¼ cup cold water for 5 minutes, and dissolve in 2 cups hot strained canned tomato juice. Add ¼ cup lemon juice and chill. Freeze in the freezing tray to a mush (about 1¼ hours) remove to a chilled bowl, beat well, cut and fold in 2 egg whites beaten stiff. Return to tray to freeze about 1 hour. Do not allow to stand in the tray long after the consistency is right, as it will harden. This is a very refreshing appetizer, which may be made into a dessert sherbet by adding about ¼ cup sugar. Makes 1 quart.

Other tomato dishes, spreads and drinks to be featured at the festivities will be tomato chowder, stuffed tomatoes, liver and tomatoes, deviled tomatoes on toast, baked tomatoes and apple jam, tomato and apple butter and tomato cocktail.

New Paper Plates Makes Baking Easier

Sturdy metal-edge paper pie plates have made their advent on the market. They are a boon to the busy homemaker, for there are no tins to buy or collect, no transfers from pie tin to serving plate, no washing or scraping, no breaking, no greasing or sticking, less baking time and less heat to bake the pie. That's considerable to expect from one paper pie plate.

The special paper-board used in the construction of these pie plates absorbs excess grease and moisture, resulting in a flakier crust. These pie plates are sold in attractive transparent wrapped packages. Each package contains five 9-inch, extra-deep plates.

BRAND NEW... SUPER-TENDER Frankfurts in the big size!

Swift & Company discovers an almost magic way to make frankfurts tender through and through!

Undoubtedly these big, round, large-size frankfurts have always been your favorites. Like a thick steak or a double lamb chop, they're juicier—have a richer, more savory flavor. And now Swift has discovered a way to give these big juicy links a completely new kind of tenderness! The meat "melts" in your mouth. And the skin, tendered in freshly crushed, pure pineapple juice by a special Swift process (patent pending), is so delicate it seems part of the meat itself. This process tenders but does not flavor. The skin couldn't be any more tender and still seal the flavor and natural juices in the meat!

Made of fine meats only... big and juicy, full of flavor.... they're a meal fit for a king!

With your first bite, you'll notice how different these new frankfurts are from the ordinary picnic kind. That's because in making them Swift uses nothing but fine cuts of meat... rare and delicate spices... and smokes them carefully under scientific controls, over real fires of fragrant hardwood.

Your first taste of Swift's Premium Tender Frankfurts will mark a red-letter day in your life. Enjoy it soon! But remember—be sure your dealer gives you Swift's Premium.

Labor Day Chance for Good Picnic

Some Suggestions For Modernizing Frankfurter Dishes Offered

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor.

Martha Ellyn

LET'S GO OUT where the air is fresh, the trees are green and everything is in harmonious tune on Labor Day, and be thankful we are living in a great country where we have the right to enjoy life in our own fashion. The holiday we are celebrating Monday all came about because, 57 years ago, September 5, 1882, a parade of labor was held in New York City. Since that time the holiday has ben adopted in all the States.

When there is a holiday from business, and picnic weather is promised, the imagination, memory and appetite are stirred. There are certain foods associated with picnics from childhood days. These we would not want to alter. But the manner in which we carry the food to the picnic grounds is different today because of modern picnic equipment. "Picnic" need not call up in your mind simply an assortment of cold foods. It is an easy matter to give picnickers at least one or two hot dishes. Electric roasters, thermos jugs and the kitchen baking dish can all go to the party carrying the hot food.

Pineapple Softens Hot Dogs

A "must" on many a picnic menu is the hot dog. This familiar food has now been streamlined and benefited by a "bath" in pineapple juice. Food chemists after research have learned that the frankfurter responds to a cold shower, and emerges with a more tender casing. The enzymes present in pineapple have a type of protein capable of acting on the organic material to peptize the proteins and soften the tissues. Such aristocratic hot dogs are made of equal parts of pork and chuck beef, and are further enhanced by spices—paprika, pepper, ginger, nutmeg, coriander and salt, plus a dash of sugar.

I went on a picnic recently where these new processed frankfurters were the stellar performers. The thermos jug carried the frankfurters and the hot water in which they had been cooked. When ready to eat, the spigot was turned and the water drained from the hot dogs which came piping hot from the "kennel." With these we ate peppy potato salad, buttered rolls, cucumber pickles, deviled eggs, chocolate cake, ice cream packed in dry ice and an iced drink. Following is a Labor Day menu with two hot dishes, so that if the weather is brisk a hot food will be included, and if it is a warm day, the menu will still be appropriate.

Picnic Menu

Scallion soup
Scalloped potatoes, frankfurters
Tomatoes and cucumbers
Buttered bread
Cottage cheese sandwiches
Fruit Cookies
Coffee

Scallion Soup—Melt ¼ cup butter, add 1 cup diced scallions and cook until soft. Add 5 tablespoons flour and mix well. Add 5 cups milk gradually and cookfi stirring constantly until thickened. Add 2½ teaspoons salt. Serves 6.

Scalloped Potatoes and Frankfurters—Pare 6 medium sized potatoes and cut in thin slices. Place ⅓ of them in a buttered baking dish and sprinkle with salt and pepper and 1½ tablespoons flour. Cut the frankfurters in half lengthwise, then in half crosswise and place on the potatoes. Cover with the remaining potatoes. Sprinkle with salt and pepper and 1½ tablespoons flour and dot with 1 tablespoon of butter. Pour 2 cups of milk over the top, cover and bake in a moderate oven, 350 degrees, for 40 minutes. Remove cover and bake for 20 to 30 minutes longer, or until the potatoes are tender. Serves 6. You can keep the baking dish hot by just wrapping it in a quantity of aper.

Frankfurters and Cheese

Frankfurters, despite their pineapple baths and their new airs, are just as democratic as ever and team up with cheese to make a delightful picnic special that can be prepared over an open fire. There's no trick to preparing these handsome super-frankfurters. It is well to choose these new robust frankfurters. Then simply make a slit lengthwise to the ends of each frankfurter, place a generous wedge of American cheese inside, wrap the frankfurter in a strip of bacon, skewered with toothpicks. Broil these tempting combinations slowly, until the juices of the meat and the cheese are bubbling and the bacon is crisply brown. Serve hot with picnic rolls, a tossed salad and hot coffee. And the people on the picnic will have fun rolling their own.

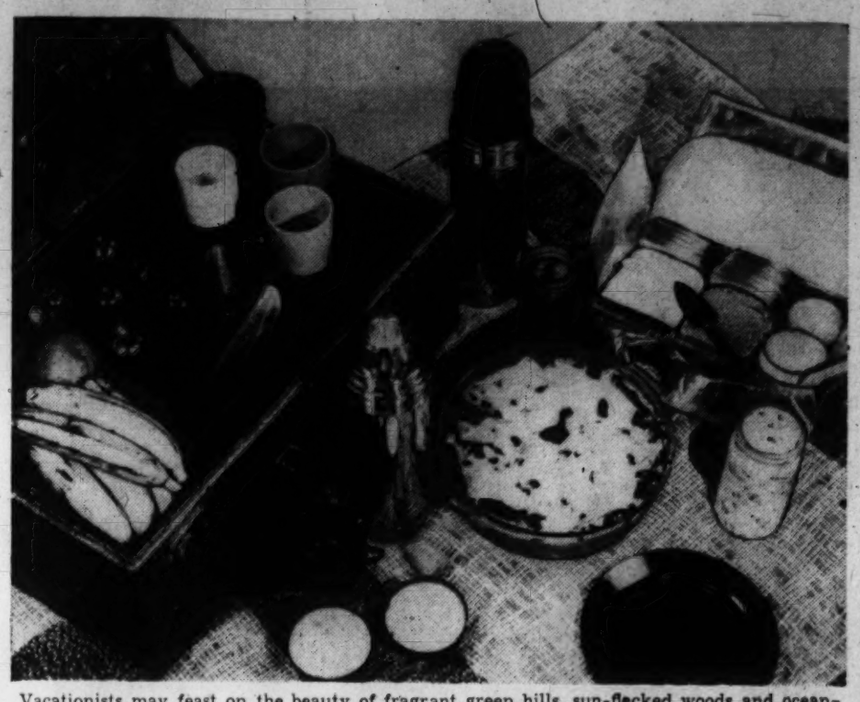
And just in case you want to take along salt and pepper shakers, I saw recently in a shop a set of inch-high salt and pepper shakers for individual use which comes neatly recessed in a box wrapped in cellulose film to keep them clean. The set includes four shakers made of plastic material. Each one is a different color—black red, green and rust—plainly visible through the transparent wrapping. The top is easily unscrewed and removed for filling. These shakers eliminate the need of carrying along bulky and heavy cellars or putting a small amount in envelopes, which usually arrive spilled over the picnic hamper.

Pack Chicken in Jug

Of course, there are some people who think a picnic is not a picnic without fried chicken. A Post food reader told me of the food she took on a ride to Skyline drive last Sunday and it is not only delicious food but easily prepared. Chicken was fried at home and corn cooked on the cob. Into the heated thermos jug went the fried chicken. Waxed paper was placed over it and on top went the roasting ears. Firm but ripe tomatoes with a jar of French dressing, a package of potato chips, butter, salt and pepper shakers of the type I have just told about and a green apple pie with cheese finished the menu. Oh, yes, there was a bucket filled with ice to carry along bottled beverages.

As a suggestion, if you want to cook the "hot dogs" over an open fire, take along a small aluminum roaster filled with Spanish noodles to eat with the hot dogs. These are easily made by using a package of noodles, canned tomatoes, ripe olives, mushrooms and cheese.

At the End of the Trail



Vacationists may feast on the beauty of fragrant green hills, sun-flecked woods and ocean-blue water, but there must also be nourishing food. There's nothing forgotten in the meal pictured above. A hot dish of scalloped potatoes with frankfurters, steaming soup in the thermos, cottage cheese sandwiches, fruit, cookies and a beverage leaves only good company to be desired

To Restore Room on $100 Budget, Apportion Funds Carefully

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

IF YOU had $100 to spend in doing over a room, how would you apportion the money? On new furniture? Or on curtains, accessories and so on?

Well, of course, that would have to depend on what you have in the room to begin with. But generally our advice would be to hang on to the old furniture if it is at all possible, and to use the money on creating a fresh background—for the simple reason that you'd achieve more of a change that way than by putting all the money on furniture, where it wouldn't go very far.

Walls Should Come First

Let's suppose that it is a bedroom on our mind and that the furniture we have is a thoroughly nondescript assortment—a dresser that had seen better days, an iron bed, vintage 1910, a couple of rocking chairs. What would you do with $100 there?

We'd take $10 and paint the walls the first thing, but instead of doing it in the conventional way, we'd leave about 2 feet all around the lower part of the room above the baseboard in dado effect. (For, of course, we'd do the work ourself.) The walls above this dado we'd paint in a soft sunny yellow, continuing the same color over the ceiling and woodwork.

The dado space we'd cover in chintz, flowered and pretty, on a yellow ground; this same chintz we'd also use for curtains, bedspread and dressing table skirt. The needed yardage might take about $30 of our allowance, but we wouldn't shudder at that because it would make more of a difference in the room than anything we could do with that much money.

Rug Is Other Big Expense

The other big expense would be a rug for approximately $30, which we'd choose in a plain pale gray. The old dresser we'd paint in the same yellow as the walls, and we'd invest $10 in a mirror and dressing table with drawers which could be draped in the flowered chintz. Another $10 would go for lamps and another for picture frames.

And now we've spent all our money and done nothing about the iron bed. But it would get a slip cover of the flowered chintz and look as smart as you please.

The rocking chairs would be painted gray and we'd add tie-on seat cushions of our chintz. Instead of looking outmoded our chairs would seem quaint and right in this

French Pancakes Are Extra-Special Treat for Sunday

We are going to have two mornings of leisure next week—Sunday and Labor Day. Those dishes that are impractical to serve during hurried week-day breakfasts can be made as extra-special treats for Sunday or Monday mornings.

French pancakes with blueberries were designed especially for leisurely breakfasting—for it is the kind of food to linger over and savor to the full. This is no ordinary pancake, for it's sort of a cross between a batter and an omelet mixture. The egg whites are beaten separately and folded in, so that it's puffy and light. After it is put in the oven for its final baking the edges curl slightly, making a splendid retaining wall to hold in the heap of sugar-dusted berries. Here's the way to do them:

French Pancake With Blueberries

Beat 2 egg yolks until thick and lemon colored. Add ¼ teaspoon salt, then beat in a little of the ½ cup of flour to be used, alternating with a cup of milk. Fold in the 2 stiffly beaten egg whites to which ¼ teaspoon salt has been added. Heat 2 tablespoons butter in a 10-inch frying pan. Pour batter into the hot butter and brown slowly. When delicately browned, set in a hot oven, 500 degrees. Turn heat low, 250 degrees, and bake until top is golden brown. Slide pancake carefully into hot platter. Heap blueberries on top, sprinkle with orange or lemon juice and dust generously with confectioner's sugar. Serves 4.

This fluffy golden pancake heaped with juicy berries is magnificent for breakfast, but it would be just the thing for dessert too. Be sure to serve it piping hot from the oven.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Rural Women Show Good Taste in Dress Because of Natural Conservatism, Says Chicago Stylist Who Directs Their Fashions

New York, Aug. 31.

IT IS ONLY natural that my mind and habits of thought should be largely dominated by the big-name fashion poobahs of this city, who suffer from the extraordinary self-delusion that their words and pretty photographs dress the women of the nation. And so it is a help to my soul when I realize that these ladies really only mold the dress and hat and shoe practices of some thousands of American ladies in the higher-pocketbook brackets.

Alice Hughes

And it is a pearl above price when across my stumbling path comes a person like Jane Alden, Iowa-born Chicagoan who styles the clothes for one of the immense mail-order houses who serve the needs of millions of Americans. I can learn more interesting and important things from this tall, pretty blond woman about the dud desires and tastes of American women than from fifty copies of any fancy magazine you can name, with their sycophantic Parisian echos. Miss Alden not only styles the clothes and describes them for those wonderful ten-pound catalogs, but she goes to dozens of towns and even villages to consult with the women of the communities on their clothes problem. Jane knows her scallions!

She tells me that the rural ladies of the Nation have the surest foundation for good taste in clothes, which is conservatism. Moreover, they are guided amazingly by the man of the house, who holds the purse and who takes an interest in what his women-folk wear. Such a man, naturally, is dress-conservative, both inherently and because shopping depends so largely on the crops.

Her words on "trends" are enlightening. She says some catch on madly, and others die. The open-toed shoes never went very big with the country ladies, but the Dutch boy shoes did. They didn't take to the rather mad drive for upturned hair-do—they brushed up the sides a bit, but let the back fall where it would. For all women whose ears are cocked too sharply for the siren words of that Paree, a girl like Jane Alden is a tonic and corrective!

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I check constantly on Sanita, the Otto H. Kahn mansion bought as a health and recreation resort by our town's street cleaners and garbage collectors with $100,000 of their very own money—to the horror of the fine old county families of Long Island, many of whom had ancestors who were successful in the last century. More than 5,000 people frolicked on the great estate last Sunday, and the sleeping accommodations for 200 are over-taxed by folks who want to vacation a week or two.

Take Battista Mistretta, who earns $32 a week cleaning the highways. He was able to give his sick sister, Catherine, two weeks at the Kahn house—which is just as fabulous now as when the Duke of Windsor was a guest there. "It is a dream that comes true only in the United States," says Battista. How I hope such proud words are justified, and that such things cross all the seas!

MARGO, who appeared in "Winterset" on stage and screen, and then married Actor Francis Lederer, has turned from her natural Latin brunette to quite blonde! She's here now, as her husband is playing opposite Katharine Cornell in "No Time for Comedy."

Laurence Olivier, whom Lederer replaced, just arrived from Europe. Vivien Leigh, the movie Scarlett O'Hara, for whom Olivier is said to have vast admiration, was on the same canoe. The prank-some Laurence, when quizzed by the press on this undoubted fact, turned very wide-eyed and said, "Why, I didn't even know she was on the ship!" You rascal, you!

Great news for our townsmen—street cars will finally disappear from Forty-second street and Broadway, making Manhattan almost bare of the tracks. Goody . . . Well, thank gosh that awful August is over. New York like to died.

ONE OF OUR largest stores makes things easy for the young men who notoriously hate shopping for their needs. It has put all the young masters' equipment in a choice spot on the second floor, where he can buy everything from his brogue to his hat, and called the place "University Row." The lads who will soon be off to college are giving nine long rahs for the shoppey.

Dust House Plants

House plants need dusting as much as the furniture does. If water does not damage the leaves (and find out from a florist about this), dust off with a sponge squeezed out in warm water. Or use a soft cloth and carefully go over the leaves. It helps ivy if you rub the leaves with olive oil applied on a soft cloth. Pat the plant with cotton that has been dipped in oil.

'R' Month Finds City Is Ready To Celebrate in Oysterly Way

Slurrrp! William McReady puts a hasty end to the season's first oyster

Chesapeake Bivalves Won't Arrive Until September 15, but There's Plenty for All From North to Launch the Gulp Season

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Consider the oyster—or if that's asking too much, let the fellow who likes them do the considering and you can forget we even mentioned the subject.

But now the "r" months are here again; something should be said about the oyster—and according to a bit of research yesterday there is plenty to say. Lamentable as the fact may be, the first shipment of tasty (?) bivalves from Chesapeake Bay and Eastern Shore beds won't arrive here until September 15 or thereabouts.

This, however, should hold no grief for those who like their half-shells by the dozen. The supply from New York and New England is plentiful and even now a goodly quantity of Chincoteagues and Lynnhavens are on hand to launch the dunk and gulp season.

There has always been a minor feud between Northern and Southern oyster marketers to see who brings in the first load when September makes its bow. New England, this year, has won in a walk.

Even the Administration has lent its support, and the first oyster of the 1939-40 season will be officially sampled at noon today by Secretary of the Interior Ickes. Howard W Beach, of New Haven, Conn., president of the Oyster Growers and Dealers Association, will preside at the shucking. Bring your own napkins.

Although it is predicted the oyster beds of Chesapeake Bay and Eastern Shore regions will be more productive than ever this year, heavy storms have hampered tongers and shipments to Washington have been held up as a consequence. If the weather continues cool, said oldtimers at the water front, good-sized loads should reach here not later than the middle of the month.

A spokesman for O'Donnell's Seafood Restaurant said they had a supply of "beauties" (in an oysterly way) ready for consumption, and Herzog's received its first shipment from the north yesterday.

That Washington takes its oyster eating seriously is indicated by the rather startling fact that approximately 63,000 bushels were consumed here last season. That, if it is not too bold to say so, is quite a batch of bivalves.

The price this year is expected to range between $1 and $1.50 a bushel. December, according to figures of Charles O. Bell, marketmaster at Seventh street wharves, is the District's biggest oyster month.

Diplomats Fete Countrymen Here for Pax Romana Parley

Irish Minister Assures Erin Delegation Their Land Won't Go to War; Luncheons And Teas Enliven Annual Convention

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

WHILE SIX OF ERIN'S delegates to the Pax Romana conference and a small gathering of other guests tea-ed and talked yesterday afternoon at the Irish Legation, the Irish Minister, Robert Brennan, made a few informal observations about the crisis abroad.

"Ireland won't be drawn into this war," he averred quietly, convincingly. Then, with a twinkle, he added, "You see we've been fighting a long time. We'll let somebody else do it for a while."

He might have said more on the subject if the gathering, at that very moment, had not been called to order by Edward J. Kirchner, international president of Pax Romana, who had just received a message from the Pope and wanted to read it.

The buzz over the tea-cups was hushed, and a pin-drop quiet settled over the assembly as the communication was made known. It said, in effect, that the Pope was deeply touched by the Pax Romana's crusade of prayer for peace, which he strongly endorsed.

Later, as the tea took up its social threads, talk still turned on the international crisis. A report rippled around the room that the Polish and Irish delegations to the conference had called off their tea-time gatherings yesterday because of the situation.

SO, EVEN AT a pleasant end-of-summer party for an attractive group of visitors, there was no escaping the shadow of Europe's war clouds. "But of course it's probably not at all as bad as it sounds," said one young delegate—a Miss O'Brien—who also optimistically observed, "We get used to crises over in our country."

Hopefully, too, Minister Brennan said he is still making plans for the visit of his country's chief, Eamon de Valera, who is scheduled to arrive the latter part of this month. If there's a war, Mr. de Valera may have to postpone his trip once more, but as I implied before, the Minister still expects him.

Assisting their parents in entertaining yesterday were the three daughters of the legation's household, the Misses Emer, Deirdre and Maeve Brennan. Very informal was the entire party, with the Minister and Mrs. Brennan receiving in the drawing room where tea was served. Miss Emer Brennan, trimly turned out in a blue-and-white print, poured tea. Her sisters passed sandwiches and other tidbits.

ALSO ON HAND to help welcome the delegation from their homeland and the other guests were the Irish Secretary and Mrs. Garth Healy, the latter of whom wore beige lace with a broad-brimmed matching hat.

The get-together was only one of a number arranged yesterday for delegates to the Pax Romana conference. The Chilean group was entertained at luncheon yesterday at the Chilean Embassy where Mr. Kirchner was also a guest. Arriving at the Irish tea with the Rev. Timothy Donahue, of Catholic University, Mr. Kirchner brought along a handsome mosaic Madonna in a gold and ebony frame, a gift from the Chilean Ambassador, Don Alberto Cabero, who flew back to Washington to be here when the Pax Romana delegates arrived.

THE ARGENTINE ENVOY, Felipe Espil, who also came back to the Capital especially to help look after his Pax Romana countrymen took them to Mount Vernon by motor yesterday afternoon. The Ecuadorean delegation luncheon yesterday at the Army-Navy Club with the Ambassador of Ecuador, Capt. Colon Eloy Alfaro.

Virtually all the 450 delegates from 36 countries have been entertained at some social event given by their homeland's diplomats in Washington.

MEANWHILE, the European crisis continues to have repercussions on goings and comings around these parts. From the other side comes word that Miss Barbara Bolling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard W. Bolling, and Miss Adele Bunker, daughter of Mme. Augusto Rosso, sailed yesterday from Genoa on the President Monroe, and will arrive in New York September 12.

With them is coming Miss Bunker's brother, George, but whether Signora Rosso is with them is not known here. Signor Rosso, Italian Ambassador to the Soviet Union, is on duty at Moscow.

Mr. and Mrs. John B. Hyde, of Washington, who were to have sailed Saturday on a Holland-American liner for Vienna, have called off their trip. Originally they had planned to go over to visit their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Fales. The latter, who was married last winter, is the former Rose Hyde. Mr. Fales is in the United States foreign service.

AMONG GUESTS of the Faleses in Vienna this summer was Miss Julie Camp, daughter of Maj. and Mrs. T. J. Camp, of Washington, who is now in Scotland, where she is scheduled to be a wedding attendant tomorrow. Miss Camp, who is a recent graduate of Smith College, left Washington in April for a European tour.

Mention of Scotland reminds me—J. Pierpont Morgan, who has spent most of the summer at his lodge in Scotland, sailed for home on Tuesday, after offering his lodge for hospital purposes in case war comes.

Shortly before leaving, he entertained King George and Queen Elizabeth, whom he saw here at the historic British Embassy tea on June 8.

POTPOURRI: The Misses Camilla and Mary Esther Edge and Loyall Howard Edge, who are at the Ambassador Hotel in New York, will be joined this month by their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Evans Edge on their return from Scotland . . . Pendleton Hogan, who had booked passage to sail for England September 9, has canceled his reservations . . . He may visit friends in Maine instead . . . Mrs. Royal McKenna, who has been at Seal Harbor, Me., for several weeks, is expected to return to Washington shortly after Labor Day.

Judge and Mrs. Groner To Come Back Soon

Judge and Mrs. D. Lawrence Groner, who have been summering in California, are expected to return here around the middle of the month. They visited the exposition in San Francisco on their travels.

Judge and Mrs. Groner were accompanied by the latter's daughters, the Misses Marian and Betty Shouse.

Ruth Bryan Rohde Is Showing Capital to Husband's Parents

The Captain, His Citizenship Papers Nearly Ready, Drops an E From First Name; Now It's 'Borge'

With his final American citizenship papers coming through in a few months, Capt. Rohde, Danish husband of the former Ruth Bryan Owen, has dropped an "e" from his first name and now spells it simply "Borge."

With her husband, Mrs. Rohde has been here for a few days in a new role—that of official guide to the Capital for the captain's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Hermann Rohde, of Copenhagen, and his sister, Mrs. Kai Hammerich. Mr. and Mrs. Rohde and Mrs. Hammerich are making their first visit to this country and could have no better guide to the city than the daughter of William Jennings Bryan.

The party is stopping at the Shoreham, in the same apartment which the Crown Prince and Princess of Denmark occupied during their visit here last spring. Capt. Rohde served in their household before his marriage. Their apartment is in the same corridor as that into which the new Danish Minister to Washington and Mme. de Kauffmann recently moved.

Though reluctant to talk about the European crisis when interviewed yesterday, Mrs. Rohde said that in her opinion, if women served on international councils, war would never occur, as they would find very few things worth causing bloodshed.

The party plans to leave Washington today for a visit at the Cedars, new home of Capt. and Mrs. Rohde at Alderson, W. Va. A rambling old Southern home on top of a hill, The Cedars is surrounded by big trees and old gardens.

"Restoring the gardens and caring for the trees is really a marvelous sensation," said Mrs. Rohde yesterday. "The trees don't stop to consider whether or not there is an international crisis before putting out their leaves, and the flowers don't stop growing because they think there might be an air raid."

The home at Alderson will serve as headquarters for the Danish visitors, who will return there following a series of motor trips South and West. They spent a week seeing New York before coming to Washington.

Danish Minister, Mme. de Kauffmann Leave for Maine

The Danish Minister and Mme. Henrick de Kauffmann left their apartment at the Shoreham last evening for a visit in North Haven, Me., with Mme. de Kauffmann's parents, Rear Admiral and Mrs. William D. McDougall.

Although the Minister will return to Washington immediately after Labor Day, Mme. de Kauffmann plans to remain in North Haven until the latter part of this month, when she will return to the Capital with their two daughters, Tilda and Lisa, who will enter Washington schools this autumn.

As yet Mme. de Kauffmann has not decided which school the children will enter; she is not yet sure where the Danish Legation will be located for the coming season. At any rate, it will take at least a month for the Minister and Mme. de Kauffmann to set up housekeeping, as all their furniture is still in Norway, where Mr. de Kauffmann was stationed before coming to America.

Traxler-Splawn Bridals Tomorrow

Miss Zola Lay Splawn and William Byrd Traxler, whose marriage is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon at Springdale, near Lincoln, Va., will be guests of honor at a dinner to be given tonight by the bride-elect's father, Walter Marshall William Splawn, of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The party is scheduled at Springdale, the summer home of Mr. Splawn. The dinner will follow the wedding rehearsal.

Miss Splawn's marriage to Mr. Traxler will be of wide interest not only in Washington where she attended school, but also in Texas, where Mr. Splawn formerly served as president of Texas University. Mr. Traxler is the son of Mr. and Mrs. David Byrd Traxler, of Greenville, S. C., who will attend the wedding.

Mr. and Mrs. Morison Coming Here To Work on Biography of Adm. Sims

SOONER OR LATER everybody turns out to be a writer, as Alva Johnston has said, and sooner or later, as lots of people have remarked, everybody turns up in Washington. Arriving here in the near future will be Mr. and Mrs. Elting Morison, of Boston and Peterborough, N. H., a delightful couple who will add much to the Washington scene. Mr. Morison is going to write a biography of his father-in-law, the late Rear Admiral William S. Sims, commander of our forces in European waters during the World War.

The Admiral, who died in 1936, entered the Naval Academy by the skin of his teeth, having first flunked the entrance exams, which he took largely to oblige a friend who was United States Representative and who was having difficulty in securing candidates for Annapolis. After graduating twenty-eighth in a class of 56, the embryo admiral lost interest for a while and spent a year's leave of absence in Paris. Later, having served as Naval Attache in Paris and St. Petersburg, he still had not risen above the rank of lieutenant, though 43 years old. It was only after he had begun to write vigorous reports criticizing the Navy ships and morale that he started to attract attention. His rise after that was rapid, though his outspoken criticisms got him into enough hot water to launch a battleship. It was characteristic that he declined to accept a Distinguished Service Medal in 1919, because, as he said, the medal had been conferred upon too many who didn't deserve the distinction and had been denied many others who were entitled to it.

MR. MORISON has been studying at his Peterborough home for the past year. He is a cousin of Miss Elizabeth Morison, who came here from Boston a few years ago to take a job in the Government, and of Samuel Morison, Harvard history professor, who with his wife, daughter and party of friends set sail earlier this week from New York to retrace the route of the voyages in these waters of Columbus.

ODDS AND ENDS: From a New York newspaper article describing how, serene, calm and unruffled Hitler has been during this past terrific week, "Associates of Hitler said his face is always serious these days, but that his entire attitude is one of claim."

If you call a certain extension in the Indian Affairs Bureau, Department of the Interior, the young lady who picks up the receiver there says "Indians at work." As an Oklahoman visiting in Washington recently remarked, "That's news."

SINCE SEYFULLAH ESIN made loads of friends during his tour of duty here with the Turkish Embassy several years ago, it's good news that he's coming to Washington shortly. He will stop this month en route from Buenos Aires to his new post in Tokyo.

Before leaving Washington, he was known as Ibrahim Seyfullah, but after Kemal Ataturk ordered all his countrymen to take last names, the diplomat became Seyfullah Esin. He was in the dreadful automobile accident in the West in which Mrs. Harold Ickes was killed. From Washington Seyfullah went to the foreign office for several years before he was sent to the Argentine capital.

EIGHT REASONS why the much pitied souls who've stuck it out in Washington through the summer are, if their resort friends only knew, secretly sorry to see the approach of Labor Day:

Except for the heat, Capital life is a great deal more fun during the dog days than at the height of the season, because:

If you suddenly feel sociable at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, you can round up a small dinner party on the spot, instead of having to wait until two weeks hence, when your friends will be free, by which time yaur mood will doubtless have changed to a hermit one.

A MAN with a motorboat will take you for moonlit rides up the Potomac, where the shadowy Lincoln Memorial, the lights of the Arlington Bridge, the dusty trees along the Speedway and the lamps of the moving bicycles on the banks make the scene of quiet peacefulness one unsurpassed in any city.

It's a joy to enter the lobby of a big hotel and find, instead of a convention, six people sitting idly on slip-covered sofas getting air-cooled.

You can dine in a walled Georgetown garden, where white candles in glass shades flicker over a glass and chromium table, and a half-moon hangs above the white gables next door.

There's a cozy feeling about the inevitable parfait in a tall, frosted glass which winds up dinners on the screened porch of the Chevy Chase Club, and which are as much a part of summer Washington as crumpled white suits and the pith helmets of the policemen.

IT'S FUN to know you can go downtown in a gingham dress and no stockings and still not be considered outlandishly dressed for the city.

The biggest thrill of all is being positively the only person you know in town over the week-end, which you happily devote to reading three books and going to four air-cooled movies—alone.

Among his guests were Attorney General Murphy, the Undersecretary of the Treasury Hanes, former Gov. O. Max Gardner, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Krock.

Mrs. Mason, who is one of the Capital's most popular hostesses, is now in Sweden. She and Mrs. John Hay Whitney had planned a visit to the Polish Arbassador, Count Jerzy Potocki, at Lancut, his estate in Poland, but called off their plans when the envoy returned to Washington several weeks ago.

Mrs. McNutt Honored at Luncheon Fete

Mrs. Dorothy Harper Entertains Wife of Security Chieftain

By Jessie Ash Arndt
The Post Club Editor.

"And above all I want to be——"

Mrs. Henry Grady was conducting an imaginary radio interview with Mrs. Paul V. McNutt yesterday at the luncheon given by Mrs. Dorothy B. Harper, honoring Mrs. McNutt, wife of the Federal Security Administrator and their daughter, Louise, at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women.

The guests waited in suspense for the final words, mentally supplying "White House" and "First Lady"——

"And above all I want to be just Mrs. McNutt," quoted Mrs. Grady, who asked and answered the questions for the subject of her interview.

The brief talk by the vivacious and attractive wife of the new Assistant Secretary of State, was one of several by prominent guests who extended greetings to the guests of honor.

Although the affair was a friendly party and not political, souvenirs of the occasion for Mrs. McNutt and her daughter were little donkey paperweights. Speculation as to 1940 was table talk around the room.

Mrs. Frank T. Hines Among Guests

Mrs. McNutt wore a tailored frock of black with a short string of pearls at her neck. The brim of her small black sailor hat was of white embroidered linen, and she carried a silver fox scarf. Mrs. Grady, who was seated at her right, wore a dove gray dress with a broad-brimmed red straw sailor and suede gloves, handbag and shoes to match. Mrs. Frank T. Hines, wife of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, seated at her left, wore a navy blue and white print, made with a jacket, and a small white straw hat, trimmed with white violets. The hostess' dress was of rose-colored linen lace and a matching flower trimmed her black hat.

Miss McNutt, who enters the University of Indiana next week, wore a dress of aquamarine crepe, the blouse embroidered in a conventional rose design, in rose color and green, and a white straw hat over her soft brown hair, which hung in soft waves to her shoulders. Her mother will accompany her to Indiana and will remain until October, when she will return to their apartment at the Shoreham Hotel.

Many Notables Seen at Table

Among other guests at the head table were Mrs. Sadie Orr Dunbar, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, who wore a gown of turquoise blue voile with a circle design of small white daisies, and a white hat; Judge Lucy W. Howarth, president of the Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and a member of the Board of Veterans' Appeals; Mrs. Carroll Stewart and Mrs. Laura S. Brown, the other two members of the Board of Veterans' Appeals; Mrs. Ruby Macdonald, of the Veterans' Administration; Mrs. James A. Drain, wife of a former national commander of the American Legion; Mrs. Fannie B. Meeks, president of the Gold Star Mothers' Association, and Mrs. Julius Peyser.

Mrs. Louis Caldwell, who assisted in receiving, also arranged the flowers in bouquets of magenta cosmos and zinnias, and lemon yellow merigolds from her garden.

R. S. Hill to Return After Labor Day

Ralph Snowden Hill, of the State Department, will return immediately after Labor Day from Bar Harbor, where he is vacationing.

Mr. Hill was among the Washington guests at the dinner given Wednesday night at the Pot and Kettle Club by Mrs. Louis C. Lehr prior to the tenth annual ball of the Jackson Memorial Laboratory for the Benefit of Cancer Research. Others in the party included Mrs. Nathan Wyeth, James F. Mitchell, jr., Dr. and Mrs. James F. Mitchell and Clarence Stetson.

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain.

Watch Your Appetite, Once You Are Slim Again, Is Warning

SLIM AGAIN... hallelujah! You never felt better in your life and you look like a new woman. Now you wonder why you didn't get your weight down long ago and regret that you gave some of the best years of your life to avoirdupois. Not for anything in the world would you regain that ugly fat!

Now you are reaping the reward of sensible dieting. All those weeks and months that you were eating the foods that keep you fit instead of fat have helped you form new fod habits. You are accustomed to eating a certain amount of food.

Watch Your Appetite

Since appetite is responsible for your gain in the first place, be on guard against anything that encourages your appetite to get out of bounds again. And that includes such little habits as water drinking with meals, taking too much salt and nibbling between meals.

If you will only stick to your rule of taking no more than one glass of liquid of any kind with the meal, it will go a long way toward helping you stay streamlined. Not that water is fattening. It isn't. There isn't a calorie in a quart, but when you wash your food down with water, it stretches the stomach and lets your appetite but a notch. You should have eight glasses of water a day, however, between meals and it is a good plan to start the day with two glasses before breakfast.

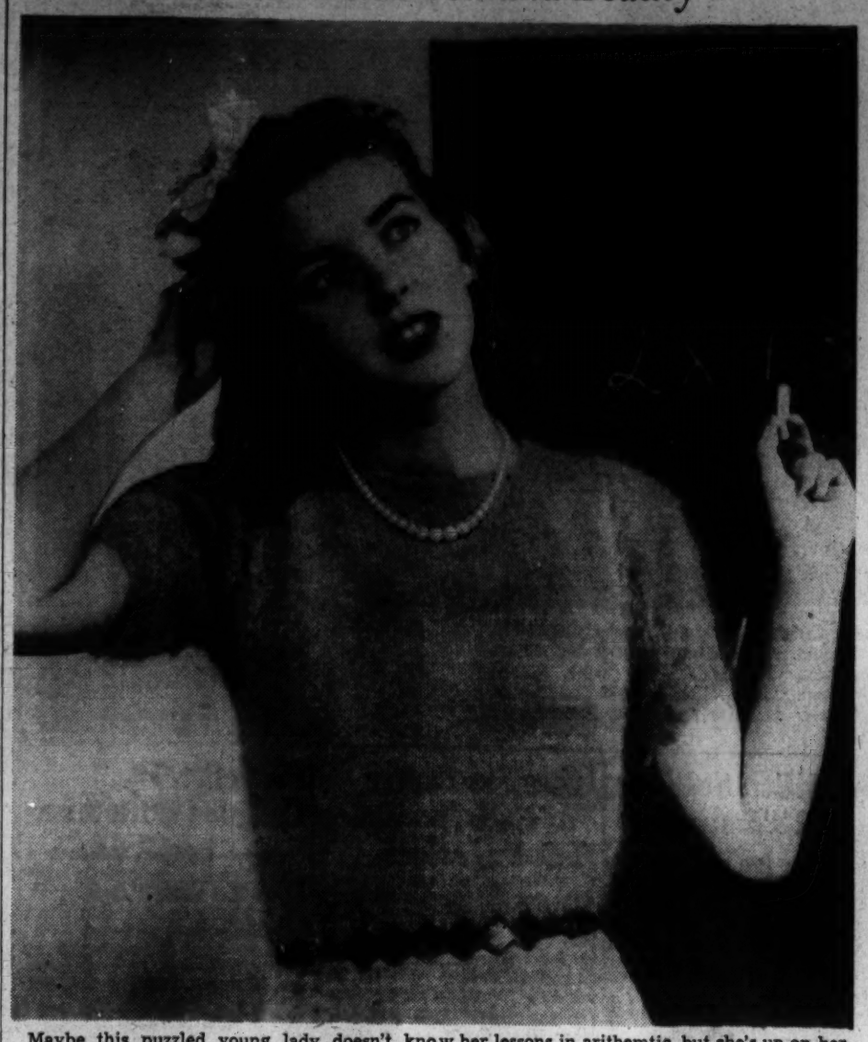
Salt doesn't contain any calories either, but you have a better chance of staying slim if you leave the salt shaker on the other side of the table. Shaking salt over everything you eat, even before you taste it, is another habit that makes it hard to stay slim. Salt holds water in the tissues and makes you water-logged.

Beats the Ice Box Habit

In getting slim, you broke the ice-box habit. You had to stop eating just before retiring and at odd times during the day. Now, if you begin to eat whenever you please, you will soon have the habit of taking these little snacks in addition to your regular meals and, the first thing you know, up the scales will go.

Here's a promise: If you will watch these habits for six months, your silhouette worries will be over. You'll have to think twice before doing something that will cause you to gain!

Lesson in Fashion and Beauty



Maybe this puzzled young lady doesn't know her lessons in arithemtic, but she's up on her fashion knowledge. Her classic angora is given her own individual stamp by a leather-lined calfskin belt, created by Criterion with a novel diamond cut front ending in bright buckles. A half-dozen, at least, of these unique, reasonably priced belts should accompany every collegian's sweater and skirt wardrobe to school

Tortoise-Shell Inlay

Tortoise shell for furniture inlays has been used off and on from the times of the Greeks. But it reached its highest development in France during the time of Louis XIV when the cabinetmaker, Boulle, used it for his most regal pieces of furniture—chiefly for table tops with gilt metal mounts and for desks. In fact, the most valuable piece of furniture in existence today is probably a desk made by Boulle for Louis XIV and preserved in the Louvre in Paris.

Summer Bachelors

THE DOMESTICATES:

Who before they are through the shrimp cocktails discreetly let their dinner partners know that they have wives and families summering within hailing distance.

Who at parties huddle off in corners with other men, and who disappear into libraries, music rooms, dens—and even into the night—when the hostess suggests that they go over and talk to the doe line on the sofa.

Who ride home alone in their motor cars from social events while unattached feminine guests telephone for taxis or mooch rides from married couples.

Who hold the stag parties their wives urged them to give, and discover before midnight that most of their old cronies they have always wanted to "see more of" are dull, stuffy bores.

Who make the rounds of friends and relatives like lost dogs, usually dropping in around meal time.

Who, if they are dragged in on a blind date to complete a foursome, find themselves visibly yawning and starting to kick off their shoes at 10 o'clock.

Who suffer for a week from indigestion after a night with the "boys" consuming hot dogs and chili.

Who make valiant efforts to cook their own meals and end up with collections of pans containing the remainders of burnt eggs and oatmeal, and stacks of dishes to which the fish smell faintly lingers.

Who are at the station neat and spruce an hour before the train arrives with their returning families, and who proudly usher their wives into houses in which the dirt has all been swept into the corners, the dirty towels hidden in the closet, and all the old bottles and other debris piled on the basement steps.

THE MEN ABOUT TOWN:

Who shed that intangible "married man" look as son as their wives and children get 15 miles out of town and who appear at their offices the next day with newly pressed trousers and snappy new straw hats.

Who in the presence of new feminine acquaintances are vague and elusive about their backgrounds, places of residence, future plans and all other personal matters.

Who make the financial gestures of millionaire playboys when go out on parties and then worry the rest of the summer as to how they are going to explain to their wives about not having money to pay the fall insurance.

Who start diets and exercises to reduce their waistlines, and scalp treatments to cover their bald spots, but abandon them after the first few weeks thinking "What's the use?" as their families will soon be returning.

Who haunt restaurants didding waitresses, who loaf around drug stores appraising the feminine customers, who hang about their offices after closing time on the lookout for other "lonely" persons, of the feminine gender.

Women Advised To Reject Many Fashion Dictates

Hollywood, Calif.—Political dictators may be the vogue abroad, but fashion dictators are not in style anywhere, declares Milo Anderson of Warner Bros. Today's woman has a mind of her own and rejects or accepts styles as her fancy dictates. She is open to suggestion, not orders.

The designer cites the ballerina skirt as an awkward style that can't be put over. It is introduced each season and each season goes back to the ballerina. Likewise Milo warns women to be skeptical of talk about upped coiffures, tiny handbags, plus fours for sports, hoops for day, dress shoes without heels and bulky fabrics. They are always rejected.

It is also smart to play "I doubt it" when a forecast comes through that squared shoulders, snug waistline touches, or boleros are on the wane. They are so flattering they will be good for many years.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Having Married in Huff When Sweetheart Put Him Off, Man Tastes Despair; What To Do?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: During my four years in high school, I dated a girl whom I loved very much. In everything we were of the same mind. Our ambitions, our religious faith, our idals and backgrounds were the same. We planned to be married after we had been graduated and I found a job. As a result of many discussions, in which we planned our future together, this goal became indelibly fixed in my mind.

In the course of time, I decided to go to college, to make our future secure. This I did, in another State, and when I had finished I was given a fine position with good chances for advancement. Then I asked her to marry me. (In all this time, I never dated another girl.) But her answer was that she wanted to work for a few months and there was plenty of time.

I felt that all my work and plans had come to naught and, boy-like, I got reckless. I drank, went on wild parties and finally married another girl whom I had known only six weeks. She is a girl of an entirely different type, and this, combined with the fact that I was already heartbroken, tempted me to take the fatal step.

We have been married three years now and I have given her everything I can afford. I have never mentioned the other girl and have been true to my wife in every respect, only to find that she, seemingly, doesn't care any more. She is careless about her appearance, doesn't plan the housework and meals as a wife should, and certainly doesn't try to make our life a happy one.

This is the problem: The first girl is always on my mind, just beneath the surface of my conscious thoughts. I remember the ideals and ambitions we shared and they are so different from what I have. I hate to go home of evenings to that careless, unplanned home. All I can think of is what might have been, although I haven't seen the other girl for nearly two years. She, of course, doesn't know that I feel this way, but her name is before me always. When I am at home, sometimes I almost call my wife by her name.

Miss Haworth, I have tried to free my mind of these thoughts, but I can't. I feel that when I am thinking of her I am not being true to my wife and I have tried so hard. I've got to do something, as I am manager of a store now and the work and worry, combined with constant heartache and the unhappiness at home, are more than I can stand. Will you answer soon? UNHAPPY.

Be Frank with Wife In Seeking Salvation

DEAR UNHAPPY: As I see this situation, you have an inescapable, however painful, obligation to talk things over frankly with your wife. It is unfair to deceive her as you are trying to deceive her, concerning the nature of your unhappiness; and, moreover, you are only making matters worse by hugging your misery to your breast. In telling her the truth, as you have told it to me, you will be treating her as a friend—a compliment to which she is entitled until and unless, by her reaction to your confidence, she proves unworthy of that honor. And you will be giving her deserved opportunity to show whether she can be an intelligent helpmeet (even though unloved at this moment).

When you have shown her the the situation through your eyes, encourage her to be equally frank. This must be done with the idea of establishing friendship, through mutually honest dealing. Having done your best to rid the relationship of doubt, distrust, ill will, resistance and all other confusing forms of intentional or unintentional double-dealing, ask her, "Now, what shall we do?"

If she shows a disposition to weigh the problem dispassionately; to be friendly, honorable and helpful; to think in terms of your happiness as well as her own, I think you will do well to follow her lead, whatever it may be. She may, on the one hand, favor divorce as the only decent solution of the dilemma. Or she may, on the other hand, suggest that you have another try at making the marriage work; may urge that you start all over again, in the light of your belated, better understanding of each other's hopes and disappointments.

I think it would be only fair that you give her that chance—if she asks for it. It might turn out far better than you would dream of, now. Dr. W. Beran Wolfe, in his book, "How to Be Happy Though Human," argues convincingly that friendship plus sex equals love. That is to say, given firm friendship and having achieved a satisfactory marital adjustment, a mellow comradeship develops which is love in its sturdiest form.

It may be that your wife's seeming indifference to you, her utter neglect of the homemaking arts, are expressions of her resentment or despair at the secret realization that you do not love her, never have loved her and bitterly regret having married her. She may feel that she is being—and has been from the first—cheated and deceived. She may be so keenly, yet so inarticulately, aware of the falsity of her position, and so distrustful of your transparent insincerity in the role of dutiful husband, as to feel disinclined to lift a hand to put a bright face on things. Yet, if she had some mutually honest acceptance of the situation, just as it is, to build on, she might be inspired to turn in a gallant performance that would restore a fair measure of hope and happiness to both.

There is a possibility, as your own statement implies, that your adolescent commitment to the other girl has developed the proportions of a "fixation." In that case, of course, your wife would have little hope of making headway in saving the marriage, regardless of how much real happiness she might give you if granted reasonable co-operation. You could only hope to recover your emotional equilibrium through submitting to psychiatric or psycho-analytical treatment. And even though your devotion to your school day sweetheart is the deep rooted, well founded love you suppose it to be, you may yet—if you have courage, character and resourcefulness—live down her loss and be happy without her, if she is to be forever denied you.

Your main difficulty, so far, I think, is that you have never fully reconciled yourself to paying the consequences of your spiteful folly in marrying to punish her. You never meant really to lose her. And your present pain, probably, is compounded of 50 parts remorse and 50 parts bellyache. I doubt, too, that you have ever really put your back into the proposition of making your marriage go. Rather, I suspect, you have been hoping and praying it would go on the rocks and leave you free to go back and try to mend that old headstrong mistake.

Summed up, my advice is this: (a) talk things over with your wife; (b) co-operate with her fully—if she so desires—in an endeavor to reconstruct the marriage on a firm foundation of frank friendship and mutually honest dealing; (c) see a psychiatrist, if necessary, in order to set your thinking straight with regard to the present and the past; and (d) consider divorce only as a last resort and a confession of complete failure on the part of both to make something worthwhile out of a misadventure.

Count Calories to Reduce

WHAT a painful moment for Mrs. Pudgy! The Slenders think Mrs. Pudgy's husband is her younger brother—and they confine their invitations for youthful fun to him!

Yes, extra pounds do add years to a woman's looks—and a pity, too, when anyone can reduce 2 pounds a week simply by substituting low-calory foods for the high-calory ones that make fat.

It is not hard to see why Mrs. Pudgy's weight goes up and up, if you compare her snacks at the beach with those of Mrs. Slender.

Mrs. Pudgy had a sack of peanuts—330 calories—a chocolate bar—400—a charlotte russe—300. That's 1,030 calories, in addition to her regular meals!

Mrs. Slender had a big sack of popcorn—only 100 calories—a slice of watermelon—100—a lemon ice—100. Tasty snacks all—but they add up to only 300 calories.

Easy, you see, to be slim when you know your calories. And when you plan your reducing meals chart in hand, what pleasant surprises you have.

No need to give up good solid foods, you find, for a medium potato has only 100 calories—no more than a large orange. A juicy medium-size piece of sirloin steak has no more calories than a banana nut salad.

On your properly planned diet you have eggs, milk, meat—all the nourishing protective foods you want for health and beauty. As for special treats—once in a while have an "indulgence day!"

Pope Blesses Pax Romana Peace Efforts

Parley Here Listens To Plea for World Social Justice

A new message from Pope Pius XII gave inspiration to the Pax Romana congress meeting here last night, as he acknowledged its announcement of a new crusade of prayer for peace.

The message ended with the bestowal of a "paternal apostolic benediction" to officers and members of Pax Romana. Both this message and another received earlier this week were signed by Cardinal Maglione.

The new message, as it was cabled, read:

"Paternal heart common Father deeply touched announcement inauguration new crusade prayer for peace by Pax Romana prays at this moment of anxiety and sorrow petitions this international gathering may be efficacious bringing peace so earnestly desired to troubled world stop Token loving gratitude pledge plenteous heavenly favor Holy Father bestows from heart to officers members Pax Romana paternal apostolic benediction."

Social Justice Stressed

Social justice and peace in a troubled world challenged youthful Catholic leaders from more than 30 nations at yesterday's sessions of Pax Romana at Catholic University.

A far-reaching program to help stave off international strife and misunderstanding will begin to be crystallized at this morning's session of the interfederal assembly. Delegates from Finland, Argentine, Bulgaria and China, and points in between, will carry the program back to their countries. Tomorrow they will leave for New York for another week of sessions at Fordham University.

Backs Labor Organizing

"Where there is social justice within a nation, there will be peace among them," keynoted Mgr. Francis J. Haas, dean of the school of social science at Catholic University, opening discussion of labor problems yesterday.

Declaring that hardly more than one-sixth of the workers in this country had won the right freely to organize themselves into unions, Mgr. Haas urged that their efforts be furthered.

Mgr. Haas, who was a member of the first National Labor Relations Board and has served as a conciliator with the Department of Labor, said Catholics had a "blueprint" of their program formulated for them by Pope Pius XI in an encyclical. Summing up points from it, he declared that "property is both social and individual" and "labor is both social and individual." The emancipation of the proletariat, the just wage and the occupational group order were emphasized.

Wants Industrial Parliament

In the occupational group order, employers and workers would send representatives to fix wages, hours and prices in an industry, with the government guiding and stimulating, he said. After various industries had followed out this plan, there would be a parliament at the top, composed of freely chosen representatives.

Speaking of "the just wage," he said it should be fixed with three points in view, the support of the worker and family, the condition of business and the common economic good.

Norman McKenna, of New York, managing editor of the Labor Leader, said to be the only Catholic paper in the United States devoted to labor news, pointed out at the same session that Pope Pius XI wrote that it is the path of duty for a Catholic workingman to join a union.

Function Within Unions

He explained how the Association of Catholic Trade Unionists functions within the labor movement in this country. In contrast, a spokesman for the Belgian delegation explained that Catholic workmen in that country often had separate unions. Senor Don Alberto Martin Artajo, of Madrid, told of efforts to educate hand-picked Catholic workmen to assume positions of leadership in the labor movement in Spain.

At other group sessions yesterday, reports were given on Catholic Action among university students in various countries. Later in the afternoon delegates scattered to visit Government buildings and to call at the embassies and legations of their countries.

Plans for the 1940 congress of Pax Romana will be discussed at the interfederal assembly at 9 a. m. today.

Suspect Admits Burglaries; Held In $10,000 Bail

Arthur Morrison, 59, was held for the grand jury yesterday under $10,000 bail when he pleaded guilty to a housebreaking charge at a Police Court hearing. He was informed before the hearing that 21 additional burglary counts would be presented against him.

Morrison was accused of stealing more than $450 of silver from the home of H. Addison Bowie, 3202 Rittenhouse street northwest, November 11.

The defendant also is charged with breaking into the home of District Court Justice James M. Proctor several years ago, stealing silverware and the judge's automobile. The property was recovered.

Alhambrans Open Conclave, Get Key to City

Delegates Have Busy First Day but Not Much Business

The eighteenth biennial convention of the Supreme Divan of the Order of the Alhambra, meeting on the first day of the three-day session at the Willard Hotel, had a busy day yesterday but not so much business.

First, the 300 delegates—600 are expected before the concluding day, Saturday—received one of Commissioner Hazen's keys to the city and heard him tell of voteless Washington and the necessity for increased appropriations to support the Nation's Capital.

Then they were read a letter from President Roosevelt, saying: "I send hearty greetings to all members of the Order of Alhambra with best wishes that the eighteenth biennial convention will be fruitful of wise counsels and constructive action in the praiseworthy work of preserving landmarks made famous by their association with outstanding events in American history."

Asks Americanism Keynote

Supreme Commander John M. Miller, of Baltimore, asked that "the preservation of Americanism be the keynote of our 1939 convention." Introduced to the convention were Alfred Paul Neff, of Washington, general chairman of the convention committee; John J. Carmody, of Washington, grand commander of Alcantara Caravan, and Past Supreme Commander James A. Quinn, of Albany, N. Y.

The supreme commander placed a wreath in the early afternoon on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and joined the delegates at Fort Hunt, Va., for an all-afternoon picnic. An "informal gathering in the Oasis" was held last night.

The meeting yesterday was opened with the singing of the "Star-Spangled Banner" by Mrs. Estelle Dean and a prayer by the Rev. Robert Montgomery, of Frostburg, Md.

'Human Chain' Rescues Youth From Quarry

William B. Yowell, jr., 19, of 3429 Quebec street northwest, narrowly escaped death late yesterday when he plunged 25 feet into an abandoned rock quarry near Great Falls, Va., and was rescued by members of the Montgomery police and Rockville rescue squad who formed a "human chain" to carry him to safety.

Yowell, with David Bell, 15, and Frank Bell, 17, of Bethesda, was climbing along a rocky ledge above the quarry when he paused to slap at a hornet, lost his balance and fell. The other boys summoned aid.

Locked hand in hand, police and firemen formed a "human chain" for 150 feet down the ragged quarry side and passed the boy's unconscious form to the roadway above.

At Georgetown Hospital physicians said young Yowell suffered fractures of both ankles and a possible fractured wrist.

Spanish Mother Who Suffered In War Fears New Heartaches

Delegate to Pax Romana Congress Knew Nothing of Fate of Her Husband for Nearly a Year; Recalls Terror of Strife

To get an idea of what war is like, look into the sad, dark eyes of Senora M. Artajo, of Madrid, who is listening to peace talk at Catholic University this week.

She can't give a street address, because her home is only a shell. She speaks little English, but it takes only a few words to say that she and her four children knew hunger and terror in a village near Madrid in the Spanish civil war. For nearly a year she did not know whether her husband was dead or alive.

Happily he sat beside her yesterday as they gave an interview through an interpreter between sessions of the Pax Romana Congress, which they are attending.

He, Senor Don Alberto Martin Artajo, a technical assistant in the labor department in Spain and vice president of the Central Committee of Catholic Action, spoke mostly of the future. He spoke of the rebuilding of Spain, with the prospect of many low-cost homes for workmen and of better working conditions for the people.

Spoke Only of the Past

But Senora Artajo, when she spoke at all, spoke of the past, of the days when she and the children hid in a cellar while fighting went on the streets.

"The first thing we had to swallow on that last day of fighting was a little water, which one of Franco's soldiers gave to my baby from his canteen," she said.

Although she came on this trip partly to get away from her memories, anxiety has followed her. She fears a new war may delay her return to the four children whom she left with relatives in a town near the Spanish coast.

Dressed entirely in black except for the red, white and blue Pax Romana badge, Senora Artajo drew out a smiling young picture of herself with the children, made before they went through the war. She is now 33 years old, but "a friend tells me that I aged ten years during the war."

Feared for Husband's Fate

Her husband was secluded in an embassy in Madrid for months, but she and the children, only a short distance away, were in a village captured by Franco's men. So she and her husband could not communicate with each other, and she feared for his fate because of his Catholic activity.

He at last got to Valencia and then by sea to Marseille. From France he entered the zone held by Franco and finally was reunited with his wife. The children showed the effects of doing without as much milk and bread as they needed.

When the family finally returned to Madrid at the war's end, Senora Artajo could not bring herself to go and look at the ruins of her home. Her husband saw it and told her that he found the four walls.

So while the Pax Romana delegates talk of peace this week, Senora Artajo quietly listens—and wonders if peace will ever again be as real to her as war.

Mrs. Ellen Sullivan Burial Tomorrow

A requiem high mass for Mrs. Ellen T. Sullivan, 54, District government employee, who died Wednesday in Georgetown Hospital, will be celebrated tomorrow at 10 a. m. in St. Dominic's Catholic Church, Sixth and E streets southwest, followed by burial in Mount Olivet Cemtery.

A resident of Washington all her life, Mrs. Sullivan was educated in St. Dominic's Parochial School and lived in the Southwest section of the city until recently, when she moved to the 200 block of Bates street northeast. She was the widow of James J. Sullivan, Navy Yard employe for 27 years, who died in 1931.

Surviving are a son, James J. Sullivan, jr.; four sisters, Mrs. Eva Rush, Mrs. Agnes O'Connell, Mrs. Minnie Doyle and Mrs. Alice Clark; two brothers, Joseph Dant and John Dant, all of Washington.

Actors to Strike If Stagehands Bar Reopening

Workers Declare They Will Walk Out Unless Sophie Tucker Appears

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 31.—A strike which may close every Broadway theater, the Hollywood movie studios and broadcasting chains neared today when Actors Equity Association voted to call out all performers if the stagehands refuse to work when the musical comedy, "Leave It to Me," reopens Monday night.

The quarrel is one of union jurisdiction, and thrusts the stage, screen and radio producers into the position of being innocent bystanders.

The Associated Actors and Artistes of America, A. F. of L. parent union of Equity, Screen Actors' Guild and several other unions of performers, recently expelled the American Federation of Actors, a union of night club and vaudeville performers headed by Sophie Tucker. The A. F. A. was immediately granted a new charter by the I. A. T. S. E., the A. F. of L. stagehands' union.

Miss Tucker was then suspended by Equity, which means that the other members of "Leave It to Me," all Equity, cannot appear with her. But the musical comedy cannot reopen without the stagehands, and they have said they will walk out unless Miss Tucker is allowed to appear Monday night.

The American Guild of Musical Artists, a union of concert artists headed by Lawrence Tibbett, also voted to go on strike rather than appear with any member of the I. A. T. S. E.

A mass meeting of all unions in the four As has been called in New York Sunday night to decide if there will be a Nation-wide strike.

Rites Tomorrow For Mrs. Norton

Funeral services for Mrs. Rosa Norton, 79, widow of the Rev. Jacob Anderson Norton, will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow in Arlington National Cemetery. The Rev. Mr. Norton was assistant chaplain for the Confederate Veterans of Washington. Surviving are three daughters, Mrs. Golder Norton Kimmel, of Washington; Mrs. Charles C. Broy, wife of the United States Consul at Brussels, and Mrs. John D. O'Leary, wife of Capt. O'Leary, of the Marine Corps.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Chicago, Aug. 31.—The eyes of Texas were upon you last night, Davey O'Brien, but so were the big, hammy hands of the bad old New York Giants. They made an awful mess of Davey's role in the college All-Stars' backfield, those hardbitten pros did, in bumping the campus darlings, 9 to 0.

POVICH

College football was never like this, little Davey was probably thinking as the nasty old Giants poured through the Collegiates' line and rushed him on his passing attempts. Davey was throwing on the run and not doing very well. Only one of his four passes was completed, one was intercepted almost as it left his throwing hand, and two others were wild shots taken in haste to get rid of the ball before a couple of tons of pros slapped him down.

As for the 82,000 persons in the stadium it was a terrific letdown. Why, this O'Brien must be some kind of a fraud. He couldn't, or didn't, do anything right. The first time he got his hands on the ball, he fumbled it—a punt that was recovered by the Giants and set the Collegians back on their heels in the first four minutes of play. By the time O'Brien was recalled to the bench, the rabid college fans intent on winning the ball game, had seen quite enough of him.

But the more astute fotball people dismiss little Davey's sorry performance lightly. What happened to him last night at Soldiers' Field can be quite meaningless. It wasn't the first time a fine football player had a poor day. Cliff Battles fumbled the ball eight times one afternoon against the Philadelphia Eagles. And let's turn the clock back 365 days to the night of August 30, 1938, when they played the fifth annual All-Star game in Chicago.

Whizzer Was Bottled Up—for One Night

That night Whizzer White, Colorado's All-American was supposed to be the hottest article on the All-Stars' squad. In the same measure that Davey O'Brien dominated last night's pre-game picture, the Whizzer was the big-shot threat of 1938. He could do everything—pass, run, kick. They would turn him loose against the Washington Redskins.

They did. The college coaches turned him loose that night, but unfortunately the Redskins didn't. They rushed White on his passes, they smeared him on his running attempts and they rattled his teeth with tackles on punts. White was a colossal flop. When he was finally withdrawn from the Collegians' line-up to make way for an obscure substitute, the crowd was pleased.

Off that performance, by White, Art Rooney, owner of the Pittsburgh Pirates, who had given the fellow $15,000 to sign a professional contract, was depressed. The guy looked like anything but a good football player.

What a violent surprise was in store for the folks who didn't think the Whizzer was a good football player. A few weeks after he joined the pros, he had established himself as one-two with Ace Parker, of Brooklyn, as perhaps the best football player in the entire pro league. Even the weak Pittsburgh team couldn't becloud his brilliance. The fellows who starred for the Collegians in the night that White flopped, couldn't carry his headgear in the pro league.

That's why Davey O'Brien can't be laughed off. It could be no series of accidents that over a period of three years he established himself as the best forward passer in college football. He can sling that leather, the best coaches will tell you. All he needs is a fair chance to show it.

Davey Shows All-Around Ability

He didn't get that chance for the college All-Stars last night. It's historical that a professional line will outplay a college line any time they meet up. With the Philadelphia Eagles, Davey will be operating behind a pro line that can give him protection.

Sure, he fumbled that first-quarter punt which the Giants recovered on the 20-yard line, but however startling it may have been t wasn't exactly a dismal sort of fumble. Because even in the moment when little Davey looked bad, there was evidence of a spark of greatness. Because he was trying to catch that punt on the run, a daring play, in which he was taking a creditable gamble. There's no telling when they'd have caught Davey on that punt return, because he was slanting toward the sidelines and an open field. That's why he gambled.

And now, friends, do not permit yourself to think that Davey's value ends with his forward passing ability. That little guy is considerable football player. We saw him save a touchdown last night with a tackle that jolted Tuffy Leemans so hard that Leemans was in no haste to get up off the ground. Davey gets a terrific take-off with his 160 pounds.

He knows what to do back there on pass defense, too. With the Giants on the Collegians' 18-yard line and Ed Danowski spreading terror with his passes, little Davey himself called a halt. He streaked across field like a greased gazelle to intercept one of Danowski's passes on the goal line and on the 15-yard line he returned the ball he was, to coin a phrase, a runnin' piece of stuff.

Davey's a little man, but he's a big little man. His 160 pounds are spread on a 5-foot-7-inch frame and he can generate the power of a man bigger than himself. He's a better blocker than Sammy Baugh, he's a better ball-carrier, and he's a better and more vicious tackler. And any time he cocks his throwing arm, the evidence is that he's dynamite, last night's performance notwithstanding.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Aug. 31.—Tris Speaker, the good gray immortal who stood out as a real tough hombre even in baseball's era of spikes and fist fights, is on the verge of becoming the Judge Landis of softball, that pale carbon copy of baseball which has aroused a pretty good proportion of fandom to teeth-gnashing.

CONSIDINE

But along with a few million others, Tris is all for softball and thinks we are on the verge of a spectacular softball boom. He sees it as a fall and winter indoor sport which will challenge hockey and basket ball for popularity. The softball league Tris would head would be a 12-team loop which would be made up of clubs from New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Philadelphia, Detroit, Chicago, Cleveland, St. Louis, Toronto, Cincinnati and two others yet to be selected.

Even Plan a World Series

"We'd run it just like the big leagues," Tris explained yesterday. "Two umpires . . . contracts . . . a regular schedule . . . a World Series each March between the winner of the Eastern and Western sections and divide up the series money as they do in the big show. We'd limit the teams to 15 players, and I believe that after those nonbelievers among the baseball fans got a load of one of those softball pitchers who strike out 20 and 25 men a game, or a look at one of those .500 hitters, they'd really like the game."

The National Professional Indoor Baseball League, as it will be known, has pretty much of a ready-made audience—thanks, curiously enough, to the high cost of industrial real estate. Softball already has become the No. 1 industrial game. The factories who embraced it and helped its workers to play it took it up because the game fits in a moderately small place and because it was an enterprise that would keep workers from 18 to 60 in a kind of physical and mental trim. No one will ever know how many strikes have been averted throughout the Midwest because the temperature of malcontent couldn't quite overcome the appeal of continuing play in a softball league.

Baseball, Too, Might Profit

Tris thinks his softball league would help baseball. "It'll keep the game alive during the winter," he reasons. "If it stirs up a lot of new kids it will develop some big league stars. Tommy Henrich got his start with a softball team, and so did Ken Keltner. And I think DiMaggio did, too."

Speaker blinked unhappily at the mention of DiMag. "Golly, I've had a lot of headaches over that story where I was supposed to have said I could name 15 better outfielders. I'm not sure I can name 15 outfielders. He's one of the greatest ball players of all time. He's the kid who's going to break up the all-time outfield of Cobb, Ruth and myself.

.400 Record Becomes Obsession

"The finest tribute I can pay to his hitting is that I think he'll hit .400. You know, there are only a handful of men in the country who really appreciate what it means to hit .400. I never made it, and I was up there swinging for it for 20 years. When you get close to it, it gets to be a kind of obsession and you get a new slant on batting averages. For instance, Joe today can hit a triple and a home run in five times at bat, win the ball game, but his batting average will drop from, say, .408 to .402. It's just impossible to describe the continual pressure on a fellow trying to keep above that .400 mark. But if there is one fellow who can do it today, it's DiMaggio."

Speaker, for one, hasn't awarded the Yanks another World Series title. "I think the Reds have a good chance of beating them in the series," Speak said. "Any team that is good enough to win the pennant in its league is good enough to win the World Series. I stopped believing there was a great difference between the leagues back in 1914 when the Braves won four straight from the Athletics. Along with everybody else I thought that the A's that year were the greatest ball club that could ever be put together. You can never tell, in a short test like the series. You can never tell."

Lewis Worsham's 74 Second Among D. C. Players; Spencer Has 75, Treder 76

By the Associated Press

Hershey, Pa., Aug. 31.—U. S. Open Champion Byron Nelson, with flawless iron play, and burly Felix Serafin, whose putter went red hot today, paced a field of 114 of the country's best golfers with sparkling 68's in the first round of the 72-hole Hershey open.

The two Pennsylvanians—Nelson, from nearby Reading, and Serafin, from the Scranton anthracite belt—mocked par from start to finish.

Nelson three-putted the first green but from then on he was at the top of his game. On the 212-yard fifth, his number one iron halted on the lip of the cup but refused to drop for an ace. It was the best round Nelson ever played on this 7,017-yard long course, punctuated by six birdies.

Needs Only 25 Putts

Serafin's sure touch on the greens saved him time and again. As usual Felix scrambled all over the course but he required only 25 putts in the 18 holes.

Little Ben Hogan, of White Plains, N. Y., Harry Nettlebladt, Framingham, Mass., and Johnny Revolta dogged the leaders with 69's. Hogan always has played Hershey well, teaming with Vic Ghezzi last year to win the round robin tournament.

At 70 were Al Houghton, Bethesda, Md., veteran, and Sam Byrd, former Yankee ball player. Jimmy Hines, Johnny Moyer, Shamokin, Pa. Charlie Schneider, Wilmington, Del., and Ed Dudley breezed in with 71s. Still under par, but 4 strokes off the pace at 72, were Horton Smith, Terl Johnson, Sammy Snead, Frank Stuhler, Jamaica, N. Y.; Andy Gibson, Baltimore, and Ted Turner.

Houghton Best

Houghton's 70 was 3 under par and was fashioned from a pair of 35s. Second in the eight-man entry from Washington, D. C., was Lewis Worsham, young Burning Tree professional, with 38, 36—74. Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam, had 38, 37—75.

Al Tredor, Manor professional, and Ralph Bogart, Army and Navy amateur, were tied at 76, each with one good nine and one bad one. Tredor was out in 36 and back in 40, while Bogart was out in 41, but back in 35.

Daily Double At Dade Park Pays $3,961.80

By the Associated Press

Dade Park, Ky., Aug. 31.—The largest daily double payoff in the history of Dade Park—$3,961.80 for a $2 mutuel ticket—was paid to Joe Specht, of Louisville, Ky., today, who held the lone ticket, combining Whisk Dolly and Zebulo.

Specht, who is a calculator in the mutuel department at the track, had a total of $70 in the daily double pool.

Specht, using Jean's Pal and Whisk Dolly as his key horses in the second race, coupled them with Freeburg Boy, Swale, Luck, Abby B. and Zbeulo in the third.

Whisk Dolly paid $11.40 to win and Zebulo $209 for a $2 win ticket.

Specht, after the camera showed Zebulo the winner, said:

"I've been playing the daily double ever since they started them, and this is the first big one I've hit."

Dykes Suspended For Three Days

Chicago, Aug. 31 (AP).—Chicago's White Sox battled the Washington Nationals tonight without the leadership of their fiery manager, Jimmy Dykes, who received a three-day suspension today accompanied by a stern warning from William Harridge, president of the American League, that he alter his ways with umpires.

The setdown followed Dykes' run-in with Umpire Red Ormsby yesterday in the first game of a double-header with Washington in which the Sox pilot was chased.

Governor's Trot To Peter Astra; Record Broken

Greyhound, Rosalind Smash 27-Year-Old Mark at N. Y. Fair

By the Associated Press

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Peter Astra, 1939 Hambletonian winner, lost his first heat of the 3-year-old campaign but won the $7,500 Governor's trot and a 27-year-old world's record was broken as highlights of the biggest day of the Grand Circuit meeting at the New York State Fair today.

The world's record was set by Greyhound, 1:55¼, and Rosalind 1:56¾, the two fastest trotters in training, which were hitched to a pole and set a sensational mark of 1:59 for the mile ovel, breaking the existing mark for a two-horse trotting hitch by more than 4 seconds.

The old record of 2:03¼ set by Uhlan and Lewis Forest at Lexington, Ky., in 1912, was shattered by the combination driven by Sep Palin, Greyhound, owned by E. J. Baker, of St. Charles, Ill., and Rosalind, owned by Gibson White, of Lexington, Ky., covered the last half mile in 58 seconds, one of the most remarkable finishes ever seen on any track. Fractional times were 31½, 1:01, 1:29 and 1:59.

Peter Astra, owned by Dr. Leroy Guilinger, of Andover, Ohio, won the first two heats of the Governor's trot to insure first money, but finished third in the final heat, being unable to stave off the stretch of Gauntlet, owned by C. W. Phellis, of Greenwich, Conn., and also being nosed out by Bagpiper from the Arden Homestead Stable, Goshen, N. Y. The victory moved Peter Astra's earnings for the year past the $39,000 mark, as first place in today's race was worth $3,112.50.

Straight-heat victories marked two of the three supporting races, but a fourth heat was needed to decide the winner of the final race, the Geers Stake, No. 4, for 3-year-old pacers.

Robert Hanover, owned by Samuel Smyth, of Chatham, N. Y., won all three heats of the $5,000 Learbury Stake, for pacers with records not faster than 2:06 and an upset winner turned up in the four-horse championship stallion stake for 4-year-old trotters, as Dita, owned by E. J. Baker, of St. Charles, Ill., and driven by Palin, captured both heats while the 1 to 5 favorite, E. J. Merkle's Long Key, from Columbus, Ohio, broke badly near the wire in both heats and finished fourth.

Tigers Defeat Bosox 2d Straight Time, 11-4

Four Errors Costly to Lefty Grove in Bid for 14th Victory; Detroit Slams 13 Hits; Scores Six Runs in Eighth

By the Associated Press

Detroit, Aug. 31.—For the first time this year and for the second time in two seasons the Detroit Tigers were able to beat Robert Moses (Lefty) Grove today. Making the most of 13 hits and 4 enemy misplays, the Bengals accomplished this rare feat as they downed the Boston Red Sox, 11 to 4, to clinch the three-game series that closes tomorrow.

The defeat knocked the 39-year-old Grove from a tie with Atley Donald, of the New York Yankees, for the league's pitching leadership. Both had won 13 times against 2 defeats until today.

The Tigers, who advanced to within a game of the fourth-place Cleveland Indians, scored their runs in clusters, getting three in the first, two in the fifth and six in the eighth.

Two Boston misplays got Grove off to a bad start in the opening frame. The scoring started when Barney McCosky walked, reached third on a one-base hit by Ervin Fox and counted as young Bob Doerr booted Charley Gehringer's roller. A sacrifice fly brought in Fox, after which Joe Cronin booted Frank Higgins' roller and Gehringer reached third, from where he scored on another sacrifice fly.

After the Tigers made two hits and a walk, good for two runs, in the fifth Grove was lifted for a pinch hitter and was followed to the hill by Charley Wagner, Emerson Dickman and Denny Galehouse, none of whom mystified the Tigers.

Paul Trout, starting Tiger pitcher, was struck on the right wrist by a ball driven from the bat of Doerr in the fifth. He worked until the seventh, when he quit in favor of Alton Benton, who finished. Trout got credit for the victory, though.

Detroit's eighth inning outburst was registered off Dickman and Galehouse and was started by George Tebbetts' third homer of the year, the only circuit clout of the game.

Unerring Wins Special Filly Race at Chicago

Lawrin's Full Sister Shows Heart to Beat Flying Lill Easily

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 31.—Unerring, full sister of Lawrin, winner of the 1938 Kentucky Derby, displayed the gamest heart today and defeated Flying Lill by two lengths in a special 1 mile race for the 3-yearlold fillies at Washington Park.

The victorious filly was crowned queen of the Western turf.

The winner, owned by Herbert M. Woolf, Kansas City sportsman and the loser, entry of Mrs. C. H. Cleary, of Chicago, raced like a team until rounding into the stretch.

Then Jockey Paul Ryan, Chicago, sent Unerring to the front and won galloping while Jockey Alfred Robertson aboard Flying Lill had to whip and boot his mount in urging her to greater effort.

Robertson flew here from Saratoga to ride the race. A crowd of 10,000 looked on.

The two fillies, rated among the outstanding in the country for their age and sex, raced for a purse of $7,500, winner take all. The track hung up $5,000, with each owner tossing in another $1,250.

Unerring went to the post at 3 to 5 in the mutuel betting and Flying Lill was 4 to 5. Bettors wagered $15,403 on the race, the eighteenth match race in the country since 1900. Unerring ran the mile over a fast track in 1:37 4-5 and paid $3.40. The fillies carried equal weights, 110 pounds.

23,000 See Dutch Win 16th Game

Knuckleballer Gives Six Hits as Griffs Take First Night Game; Case Stars

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Chicago, Aug. 31.—Dutch Leonard's knuckle ball is not less potent by night than by day. That fact was established to the complete satisfaction of Manager Bucky Harris and the equal dismay of 23,000 Chicago fans this evening, when the big right-hander conducted the Nats to a 4-to-3 victory over the White Sox.

He threw a six-hit performance at the Chicago club in the last game of the Nats' current Western tour, and he pitched the Nats to their first victory in big league night life. Unaffected by a slight chill in the night air, he nursed a slender lead to the finish and recorded his sixteenth victory of the season.

For the most part the White Sox were swinging futilely at Leonard's knuckler, which fluttered plateward with eccentric dips, and two of the Chicago runs were the direct results of freak hops by ground balls.

Nats Slug Smith

The Nats slugged left-handed Ed Smith out of the box in a two-run uprising in the sixth inning, but were held scoreless thereafter by big Johnny Marcum. They collected 10 hits for their evening's efforts, with Jimmy Vernon the most potent factor in the attack. Vernon produced two runs with a second-inning single.

Leonard reached his peak of effectiveness in the seventh when the White Sox were unable to get Rosenthal across the plate despite the fact that he had tripled with one out. In the ninth, Rosenthal made a bid to tie the score with a homer, but George Case backed up against the rightfield wall to haul down his drive.

The Sox gave Southpaw Edgar Smith a 1-0 lead in the opening inning with the help of a freakish triple by Joe Kuhel. With one out, Kuhel lined a hit into right field and it took a weird hop past George Case, rolling to the rightfield corner. Kuhel scored from third on Kreevich's grounder to Gelbert.

Nats Take 2-1 Lead

Rookie Jimmy Vernon slugged the Nats into a 2-1 lead in the second inning. Charley Gelbert drew a walk with one out and Jimmy Bloodworth lashed a two-bagger down the leftfield line. Vernon then lined a single to right-center to score both runners. The rally expired when Rick Ferrel grounded into a double play.

Bobby Estalella left two Nats on base in the third inning when he struck out for the second consecutive time.

Leonard breezed easily through the fourth, fifth and sixth innings with the help of spectacular pickups by Charley Gelbert and Jimmy Bloodworth, and the Nats in the sixth inning swatted Smith out of the box to improve their lead to 4-1.

They scored two runs in the sixth despite the White Sox's fourth double play of the game, which interrupted the attack for a bit.

Bill Osmanski 'Most Valuable'

Chicago, Aug. 31 (AP).—The performance of Bill Osmanski, fullback from Holy Cross, against the victorious New York Giant football team in last night's college all-star-professional clash for charity today earned him the most valuable all-star player award.

Osmanski, selected in a poll of newspapermen who saw the game, succeeded Cecil Isbell, of Purdue, 1938 winner. He will receive the award at next year's all-star game.

Osmanski, who also shared captaincy of the all-stars with Bowden Wyatt, Tennessee end, will join the University of Iowa coaching staff this fall.

Alice Marble Wins at Essex; Is Lone American Survivor

By the Associated Press

Manchester, Mass., Aug. 31.—Alice Marble, of Beverly Hills, Calif., the undisputed world's queen of tennis, defeated England's Nina Brown, 6—2, 6—0, today to become the lone American survivor as the Essex County Women's tournament reached the semifinal stage.

After a busy day's play in a blustering northeast gale, three foreign stars remained in the running, Mme. Simone Mathieu, of France, and two British Wightman Cup stars, Valerie Scott and Mrs. Freda James Hammersley.

Mrs. Hammersley, second seeded in the foreign list, won the right to meet Miss Marble, the defending champion, by beating the veteran, but unseeded Mme. Sylvia Henrotin, of France, 6—3, 6—3.

Mme. Maathieu sprang a sharp upset by eliminating the youthful Dorothy Bundy, of Santa Monica, Calif., America's third ranking singles star, 6—4, 3—6, 6—3.

Miss Scott, top seeded foreigner, was forced to play through two rounds and she defeated two of America's "top-ten" to win her semifinal berth.

Bees Sell Simmons to Reds; Other Clubs Waive on Him

By the Associated Press

Boston, Aug. 31.—President Bob Quinn of the Boston National League Baseball Club announced today veteran Outfielder Al Simmons had been sold to the Cincinnati Reds for a "nominal sum."

The 38-year-old leftfielder became the property of the league-leading Reds in a surprise move after all clubs in both leagues had refused waivers on him. The deal was completed in a telephone conversation between Quinn and Bill McKechnie, Cincinnati manager.

By the deal, Simmons, a star player in the American League for 15 years, may get a chance to play in his fourth World Series. He was a member of the great Philadelphia Athletics team which won American League pennants in 1929, 1930 and 1931.

Simmons came to Washington from Detroit in 1937 and had mediocre success with the Nats for two seasons. Smouldering differences with Owner Clark Griffith finally flared and Griffith last winter asked waivers and sent him to the Boston Bees. Probably the major factor in Simmons' departure was his run-in with Washington fans toward the end of the season. Angered by what he termed "abusive language" by a spectator Simmons answered in the same vein and drew down much criticism from the press.

3-Run Triple By Thorne Is Decisive

Hit in 5th Barely Lands Fair to Clear Bases; Winners Face Tru-Blu for Title

By Bill Burnett

A triple that fell less than two inches inside fair territory yesterday, proved the undoing of Plaza Wine in a semifinal game for a trip to the national softball tournament in Chicago, International Business Machines taking a 5-to-4 victory at Eastern High Stadium.

Norman Thorne, quiet-spoken first-baseman for I. B. M., was responsible for the blow in the fifth inning. He came to bat with the bases loaded and I. B. M. on the uncomfortable end of a 3-1 count. With a strike and a ball against him he hit into left field, the ball evading Plaza's Lou Mostow and sending Creamer, Koegle and Love across the plate. Thorne later scored on Bauer's single to center.

I. B. M., champion of the Commercial Twilight League, with the victory earned a final berth against the powerful Tru-Blu club. The crucial game will be played at Eastern Saturday at 3 p. m., the winner leaving next Wednesday for the national series.

Beaten by a club with better pitching, Plaza nevertheless made a battle of it throughout. The Winemen scored twice in the opening period on walks issued to Mostow and Jerry Zanelotti, followed by Charley Aquilino's thumping triple to center, and again hit the scoring column in the third when Pitcher Juliano was walked, and raced all the way from first on Bob Plaisted's misplay.

Despite I. B. M.'s four-man barrage in the fifth, Plaza was still in the fight when it pushed over another run in its half of the same inning. Again it was a pass, this one to Phil Cassidy, that started the rally. Juliano singled Cassidy to second and he scored from there on Kaegle's bobble of a grounder.

The fifth run tallied by the Machinists came in the third on Love's single, Thorne's walk and Bauer's sacrifice.

Nine safeties were registered off Juliano's efforts, while Plaisted, the winner, was touched for only three. The latter fanned four and gave up only six walks, compared to Juliano's eight passed and no strikeouts. Aquilino's triple was the only respectable hit made by the losers.

Ernie Dusek Pins Singh

Hindu's Cobra Clutches Fail

Before 2,500 fans, one of the largest wrestling crowds of the season, Ernie Dusek last night thwarted Nanjo Singh's best Cobra Clutches to pin the Hindu in 18 minutes of the feature match at Griffith Stadium.

After effecting a break of Singh's pet grip with which he has compiled a lengthy list of local victories, three times by writhing outside the ropes, Dusek made use of an airplane spin to weaken his foe for the fall.

In the semifinal Jack Hader defeated Pete Balthis in 17½ minutes with a crab hold. Playing the villian, Hader drew prolonged booes from the crowd by his continual fouling tactics.

In other bouts, Tommy Rae pinned Bob Wagner in 20 minutes with a body press; Rudy Dusek leveled Abe Yourist in 23 minutes with a rocking chair split, and Joe Cox threw Stanley Pinto in 17 minutes, though he injured his back in a fall from the ring.

Jacobs to Demand Showdown on Nova Referee Situation

New York, Aug. 31 (U.P.).—Joe Jacobs, manager of Tony Galento, announced today that he will demand a "showdown" regarding the referee for the Galento-Nova fight at Tuesday's meeting of the Pennsylvania Athletic Commission in Philadelphia.

Contracts for this bout at Philadelphia's Municipal Stadium September 15 stipulated that either Arthur Donovan, of New York, or George Brake, of Los Angeles, should officiate. Nova's manager, Ray Carlen, insisted upon this proviso.

"Carlen has been quoted in the Philadelphia papers as saying that he doesn't care now who referees the bout; he's so sure Nova will win," Jacobs said. "Well, all right, I'll demand then that a Pennsylvania referee be appointed. It's a reflection on Pennsylvania officials to import an outsider, and I was never in favor of it anyway."

Archibald Here To Train for Jeffra Fight

Featherweight Champ To Drill Daily at Young's Outdoor Gym

Joey Archibald, world's featherweight boxing champion, arrived last night to start his local training campaign for the 15-round title match with Harry Jeffra, Baltimore challenger, at Griffith Stadium on Monday night, September 11.

The same Archibald who fought here more than two years ago as a preliminary fighter and rose to fame and the world's championship on the wings of 14 consecutive local victories stepped off a train from New York at 6:20 p. m. Accompanying the champion were his diminutive trainer, Charlie Goldman, and a sparmate, Spider Armstrong (no relation to Henry), a Canadian.

Archibald, who has never fought Jeffra, and has never seen him fight, said he'd prefer to pass judgment on the Baltimore boy's ability after September 11. But Joey made it clear, however, that he would have a fight on his hands, especially with a chap who formerly ruled as world's bantamweight champion.

Archibald came here direct from his New York training camp. He will begin the local grind this afternoon around 1:30 at Mike Young's outdoor gym just over the District line on the Marlboro Pike and Bennings road, a few miles from the Capitol. The public has been invited to the daily workout.

In addition to his sparmate, Armstrong, Joey also will spar with a number of local boys.

Archibald will drill each afternoon at this outdoor camp, but Challenger Jeffra, now training in Baltimore, will come over next week for a few public drills. Jeffra is due here Sunday to play with Wiffy Cox, Congressional professional, in an exhibition golf match against two local golf stars.

Nova Arrives In Philadelphia

Philadelphia, Aug. 31 (AP).—Lou Nova arrived here today from Atlantic City to continue training for his heavyweight battle with Tony Galento at Municipal Stadium, September 15.

The California fighter's manager, Ray Carlen, announced that training quarters would be moved from the shore resort to the Philadelphia arena.

Remon and Bogley Leave Tonight for Gold Cup Races

John A. Remon, president and general chairman of the President's Cup regatta, and Aubrey Bogley, chairman of the race committee, will leave tonight for Detroit to attend the Gold Cup races which will be held over Labor Day week-end.

Bogley said yesterday that he expected to sign some new entries for the President's Cup race while in Detroit.

The President's Cup regatta will be held on the Potomac September 22, 23 and 24.

Central High Begins Grid Drills Today

For the second straight year, Central High School will begin football practice before all interhigh rivals today, when more than 75 candidates are expected to report to Coach Hardy Pearce. Practice will start at 9:30 and continue until 12:30.

Last year Pearce stole a march on his interhigh opponents by calling out his squad much earlier than usual, and as a result the Mount Pleasant school won its first championship in three years.

The outlook for a successful defense of the title is not too bright, however, for only six lettermen are certain to return. Of that number, three are ends and three are backs, so Pearce must develop an entire line out of more or less raw material.

All-High Quarterback Benny Steiner, Fullback Jim Porter and Halfback Harry Martin are the returning backfield men, and Sam DiBlasi, Dick Farr and Lorenz are the experienced wingmen.

Pearce plans to hold scrimmages of increasing length as soon as the boys' physical condition will permit.

Lanigan Defends Scull Title Today

Paul Lanigan, Potomac Boat Club oarsman, who captured the junior single scull title in the Middle States Regatta last year, will again be in competition Sunday when the 1939 races are held at Spring Garden in Baltimore. Lanigan will step up a notch and try for the intermediate title this time. He will also be stroke for the doubles combination that includes Bill Stewart.

Potomac B. C.'s representative in the junior class will be Edmund Mason.

Veteran Gunner Wins Feature Rifle Match

Sargeant of 25 Years Marine Service Ties Mark at Camp Perry

By the Associated Press

Camp Perry, Ohio., Aug. 31.—A veteran of nearly 25 years of service as a United States Marine was the toast of the national rifle matches today, and the recipient of a personal letter of commendation from President Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Master Gunner Sergt. Thomas J. Jones, of Sparta, N. C., a "Devil Dog" for 24 years, defeated the greatest field in rifle history, 2,032 entrants, in the 30-caliber, 30-shot President's match, with a score of 147, equalling the record.

Jones won the big event over his own protest. On the 1,000-yard range he declared the haze caused his official scorer to give him one more point than he actually deserved on one shot, but match officials overruled him and awarded him the championship, one of the most coveted in rifledom.

"I shoot for the fun of shooting, and I don't want anything I don't deserve," Jones told match officials. Jones has been a top flight gunner for more than 20 years, and previously had won practically every major 30-caliber title. Today's match was fired at 200, 600 and 1,000 yards.

Bill Ackerman's Column On Fishing

ACKERMAN

In spite of the many squalls over most of the Potomac watershed during the past six days, it looks as though this week-end will find bass fishermen pursuing their sport, for there is plenty of water that is fishable.

On Wednesday, even the river above Washington was in reasonably good shape and clearing fast. With no further rains today or tomorrow, the going should be good at Swain's Lock and Seneca. And at Great Falls above the dam.

If you don't remember, it might not be amiss to remind you that Bill Leetch and his Bethesda Ikes released some 400 big large-mouth bass at this point late last year. Some of the largest were better than four pounds.

The idea was that these fish would better stand the crowding of the catfish, the population of which has reached real proportions. Just why anglers do not fish more for the bewhiskered fork-tails is more than we can understand. They are delicious eating—a game fish, if the name is deserved by any in these fast waters, and will strike at top lures as well as bottom bait.

We would appreciate a report on any large-mouth bass taken in the Potomac above the dam, so that Bill Leetch and his stocking crew may know whether it is worth while to continue with the planting of the species.

A bass stream worth keeping in mind is the Great Cacapon in West Virginia. Generally clear when all other waters are unfishable, it is always advisable to find out before going up, however; for a heavy rain right over its banks will muddy the water for a period of several hours to a day. Call Cecil Long at Yellow Springs for last-minute information.

The Piney Point section of the lower Potomac is usually productive of good fishing from early June right through to cold weather. For some reason or other this season has found the going rather spotty. Good catches have been made, but not consistently.

From now on the story should be entirely different, for the rock schools, which have been so sluggish in taking trolled lures, due to the long spell of hot weather, according to Capt. Dick Rogers, have no further excuse to be finicky as to their feeding times.

In addition, schools of trout are feeding along the grassy shores from the point up to Tall Timbers and off Ragged Point. At no other point on bay or river do these grand sport fish school any thicker or provide any better going for anglers than right here. We have seen some exceptional catches taken season after season.

Ridge boats, fishing on the Middles just before the current northeaster, found trout and small bluefish schooled and feeding so heavily the whole area was a vast slick. Catches run to 100 and more to the boat. Not a one but missed out on it. We would say this was a good bet for this week-end.

The trout in the catches of Herring Bay boats are growing day by day. The same is true of Shadyside boats fishing the Hill-top in the mouth of Eastern Bay. Here also is about the best chance we know for rock. Since early spring, the stripers have been working the edge of the channels under Poplar Island and in the deep water off Bloody Point Lighthouse.

Dolphin and marlin are jumpers beyond any doubt. Broken loose with a set hook and considerable line attached, they are known to jump continuously in their efforts to free themselves. We have seen it with marlin and often wondered if anyone has ever been able to pick up the free end of the line, and continue on to boat the fish.

From Bill Sharp we learn that Tom Eaton, the Duke of Hatteras, is renaming one of the Hatteras boats with the cognomen "Retriever" for just such a happening.

It seems that an angler fishing from it with light bass tackle hooked a dolphin, which promptly proceeded to run all the line off. The skipper turned the boat, following the jumping fish for nearly a mile before he was able to pick the line up with a boathook. Threaded back through the guides and attached to the reel, the errent dolphin was landed.

At Southport two more great fish of tropical seas have been brought in to swell the already large number of oddities which have been caught in North Carolina off shore waters this season.

The first was a 13-foot sawfish, the second a West Indies carrier shark, and the first of the species ever to be noted in that section. It was caught on hook and line by a Charlotte angler while fishing off Baldhead Island. The fish, six feet long, and weighing nearly 200 pounds, had no back fins. The hide was extremely tough, and the mouth, like that of a catfish, the lower jaw extending even with the upper, and both covered by lips bearing whiskers or barbels.

On the North Carolina coast sports fishermen count their seasons by their catches. And, according to these catches, the fall fishing is under way regardless of climate or calendar.

Always the point of departure for the open sea of the mackerels—it is also here that the first run of the common northern mackerel in early spring is noted, as well as the beginning of the southern hegira of the king and Spanish mackerel. The king mackerel definitely arrived in the blue waters of the Gulf Stream this week. Proof beyond doubt of the fall run.

At the new 1,000-foot pier at Nags Head, blues weighing up to four pounds, sea trout and an occasional channel bass are being taken.

Surf fishermen are fishing the sloughs, and taking channel bass. Big black drum are running the beaches around Hatteras and large schools of smaller drum are feeding in the inlets.

Fishing at the whistle buoy, 18 miles off and four miles this side of Frying Pan Lightship, three local anglers, F. M. Pratt, S. P. Spitz and Robert T. Highfield, recently caught a 22-pound bull dolphin. The largest taken in that area this year. A 30-pounder was the largest of the five barracuda caught on the same day.

The storm very effectively slowed down the white marlin run at Ocean City. Whether it is over for this season is something no one can say right now. The next few days will hold the answer to that.

The big fish have been known to stay until tre middle of September, but a northeaster at this time usually drives the main schools far offshore, leaving scattered pairs and singles.

Success of National Tennis Tourney Hinges on Peace

Many Foreign Seeded Stars On Call Here

Gracyn Wheeler, Henkel May Be Detained Abroad; Riggs Top-Seeded

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 31.—Pairings for the national tennis championships were drawn today in an atmosphere of gloom and uncertainty because of the possibility that many of the foreign stars will have been called home for war duty before play begins September 7.

Foreign seeded players included Charles Hare, of England; Henner Henkel, of Germany; Bernard Destremau, of France; Ferenc Puncec, Franjo Kukuljevic and Drago Mitic, of Yugoslavia, and four members of the Australian Davis Cup team, Adrian Quist, Jack Bromwich, Harry Hopman and Jack Crawford.

All except Henkel are in this country now. His name was left in the pot on the slim possibility he can leave Germany in time to compete. The veteran Jacques Brugnon, another entry, is a reserve officer for France. News of England's mobilization came while the drawing was in progress and he said soberly: "Maybe we will not get to play."

Gracyn Wheeler, one of the 64 entrants in the women's division, has been playing abroad and officials did not know whether she would gain passage home in time to compete at Forest Hills.

The men's draw placed Bobby Riggs, this Nation's No. 1, in the top quarter with Hopman, fourth-seeded foreigner, and other such stars as Bryan Grant, jr., Sidney Wood, jr., Hal Surface and Gene Mako.

The second quarter found Don McNeill, fourth-seeded domestic, grouped with Puncec, Crawford, Joe Hunt and Henkel. Frankie Parker, second-seeded American, was in the third quarter with Bromwich, Gilbert Hunt, Charlie Hare, Kukuljevic and Frank Shields. In the fourth quarter were Elwood Cooke, third-seeded American, with Quist, Destremau, Johnny Doeg, Wayne Sabin and Welby Van Horn. If the women run true to their seeding, the semi-finals will find our Alice Marble, defending champion, playing Mme. Simone Mathieu, of France, in one match and Helen Hull Jacobs battling Kay Stammers, of England, in the other. The winner, and still champion, likely will be Miss Marble.

As to the probable winner in the men's division, more will be known about that after the Americans and Australians finish their Davis Cup squabble this week-end at Merion Cricket Club.

Munger, Goodman Win at Arcola

Arcola, N. J., Aug. 31 (AP).—Jack Munger, of Dallas, Tex., semifinalist in the 1933 National Amateur Championship and medalist yesterday with a record 67, defeated Arthur Atkinson, of Winged Foot, 2 and 1, after eliminating William Breslin, Ridgewood, 8 and 7, in the Arcola Country Club Golf Tournament today.

Johnny Goodman, of Omaha, Nebr., national open champion in 1933 and national amateur kingpin in 1937, defeated Peter Forsman, of Wykagyl, 2 and 1, and Jack Deetjen, of Hackensack, 3 and 2. Goodman was even par for the day's play.

Dr. Walker Scores Ace at Chevy Chase

Dr. Allan E. Walker scored his first hole-in-one yesterday on the tenth at Chevy Chase, and has Professional Robert T. Barnett for a witness.

Playing with Mrs. Walker, the doctor stepped up to his ball on the tenth, and, to his surprise, it hit on the green and disappeared in the cup on the 165-yard hole.

He rushed over to the golf shop, told Barnett what happened and asked him to verify it. Bob walked over to the green and picked it out of the cup—to make it official.

Moses Stars, Macks Beat Browns, 4 to 2

Leadoff Man Scores One Run, Drives In Others With Homer

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 31.—Leadoff Man Wally Moses assumed the personal responsibility today of leading the Philadelphia Athletics to a 4-to-2 triumph over the St. Louis Browns to give the A's a clean sweep of the three-game series.

After doubling in the opening inning to score the A's first run, Moses walloped out a home run in the fourth, sending Sam Chapman and Pitcher Nelson Trotter across the plate ahead of him.

The Browns outhit the Athletics, ten to six, but couldn't get their men all the way around the paths. Thirteen were left stranded.

The setback pushed the Browns deeper into the cellar, and they now trail the seventh-place A's by nine games.

Unless War Develops, Aussie Net Team Plans Tour of Japan

Davis Cup Squad Would Go to Orient After Playing on Pacific Coast Late This Month

By the Associated Press

Haverford, Pa., Aug. 31.—Unless a European war develops, Australia's Davis Cup players expect to tour Japan after the challenge round against the United States here this week-end.

Capt. Harry Hopman announced the plans today after a transpacific telephone conversation with Harry Pitt, acting president of the Australian Lawn Tennis Association, at Melbourne.

"If war should break out," he said, "our program would be changed. Both Adrian Quist and myself would probably be called home immediately."

To Go to Japan

Hopman said tentative plans call for the Australians to enter the United States championships at Forest Hills the week of September 7, the Pacific Southwest in Los Angeles September 22, and perhaps the Pacific Coast tournament in Berkely, Calif., the week of September 29.

After that the team will leave for Japan. Should they decide not to take part in the Pacific Coast tourney, they plan to sail direct to Yokohama, then return home with a stop-over at Honolulu.

The Australians went indoors for the second successive day, while American players practiced outside briefly despite intermittent rain.

Riggs Plays Kramer

Jack Crawford, of the Aussies, played against John Bromwich, and Hopman tested strokes with Elwood Cooke, merican player, who was not named for the Davis Cup team.

In the American camp, Bobby Riggs opposed Jack Kramer for half an hour in singles drill, and Bruce Barnes, one of the coaches, played with Joe Hunt.

The Davis Cup committee selected Paul W. Gibson, of Philadelphia; Van Richards, of New York, and Benjamin Dwight, chairman of the umpires committee, as umpires for the challenge round.

The draw will be held tomorrow 1:45 p. m., Eastern standard time. Sir Norman Brookes, of the Australian Lawn Tennis Association, will pick the first American player. The first Australian player will be picked by Holcombe Ward, president of the United States Lawn Tennis Association.

Pirates Blank Phillies, 1-0; Lose 2d, 11-6

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 31.—The sixth-place Pittsburgh Pirates and the last-place Phillies divided a double-header today in the only game played in the National League.

Big Max Butcher shut out his former teammates, 1 to 0, with five hits in the opener to win his third straight game and his fifth of the year while Walter Beck pitched the Phils to an 11-to-6 triumph in the nightcap for his second straight and his sixth win of the campaign.

Butcher was in trouble in the first three innings, but settled down after Hershel Martin led off in the third with a double. Thereafter only one player reached first against him—Martin beating out a bunt with two down in the eighth.

Walt Kirby Higbe, the Phils' star rookie, kept on even terms with Butcher until the eighth when Lloyd Waner led off with a single, was sacrificed to second and scored on Arky Vaughan's one-base smash over George Scharein's head.

The Phils pounded out 14 hits off enemy pitchers in the second game. Bob Klinger started, but was knocked out before retiring a man as the Phils pushed over five runs.

Elbie Fletcher temporarily put the Bucs back in the running in the third by driving in three runs with a double off the rightfield wall, but the Phils knocked Truett Sewell and Bill Swift out of the box with another five-run splurge in the fifth to win.

Man of the Month

By Walter Johnson.

(Following each game by The Washington Club, Walter Johnson distributes among the Nats ten points of merit, based on their performances for the day. At the end of each month, the Washington player boasting the greatest number of points is designated as the Nats' "Man of the Month" and receives a trophy from The Washington Post.)

The Nats' Man of the Month for August was: Jimmy Bloodworth.

The little second baseman who got his chance to perform for the Nats a little more than a month ago when Buddy Myer suffered a wrist injury while sliding, has been a sparkling asset to the club from that date.

As Man of the Month for August, Bloodworth beat out Buddy Lewis for the honors by a comfortable margin. Lewis, winner of the July award, challenged Bloodworth for the lead in the August contest, but could not match the consistent play of the little second baseman in the latter days.

On the Nats' return to Washington, Bloodworth will be presented by The Washington Post with a $50 merchandise order on any Washington store in token of his newly-won honors.

During the past month Bloodworth established himself as one of the prize rookies of the 1939 season, particularly with his defensive play around second base. He was the spark of the Nats' eight-game winning streak and has been maintaining a batting average that hovers around the .300 mark.

Points yesterday were awarded as follows:

To Leonard, five points, because he held the Chisox in check with six hits to record his sixteenth victory of the season.

To Mickey Vernon, three points, because his second-inning single drove in two runs and established the Nats in a 2-1 lead.

To Jimmy Bloodworth, one point, because he made two hits, scored a run and further helped Leonard by spectacular fielding.

To Buddy Lewis, one point, because he tripled and scored an important run in the sixth.

A Message from a Senator of Cuba

SENADOR
Enrique Recio
LEADER OF THE LIBERAL PARTY
REPUBLIC OF CUBA says:
"You ask me if your new WHITE OWL cigars taste like the Havanas that I smoke regularly? The answer is yes and no. The Havana tobaccos which you have blended into your cigar give it a real Havana taste—yes. But my Cuban cigars are much heavier, a stronger smoke. But then it may be that Americans do not want a heavy cigar—in which case your WHITE OWL gives them the real Havana taste in milder form."

A brand new Blended-with-Havana cigar—approved by Havana itself

DOWN IN HAVANA, they really know the taste of Havana tobacco—you can bet on that. So we took the new Blended-with-Havana White Owl down there to test it. We selected prominent Cubans—real connoisseurs of cigars . . . gave them some of the new White Owls to smoke. Without exception they all praised the rich Havana flavor of this new cigar.

We feel awfully proud of this new cigar. We're proud of the Havana tobacco we use in it . . . it's a really good grade. Does that sound unbelievable for a 5¢ cigar? Well, we are America's largest buyers of Havana tobacco and we know what we are talking about. Fact is, it's the same type of Havana tobacco that is used in popular cigars costing 10¢ and more. And there's a generous helping of this tobacco in each White Owl, too.

We could go on and on telling you about the new White Owl, but the only way for you to find out how good it really tastes is to smoke one. If you enjoy a good cigar, try one of the new White Owls today. Your taste will tell you why it wins the honors—even in Havana.

BLENDED with HAVANA
New INVINCIBLE
5¢
New CLUB HOUSE
Your choice of 2 shapes
Another "10¢" feature—now yours for 5¢ . . . a choice of shapes to suit your smoking taste. A long, trim, new Invincible. And a rich, full-bodied, new Club House shape. You get the same amount of tobacco—the same mild blend in either size—only the shape varies.

Schley Goree, Paying $12.40, Wins at Marlboro by 4 Lengths

Lead Please Takes Show Money; Daily Double of Balkanese, Brainchild, $17.40

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Marlboro, Md., Aug. 31.—Schley Goree, owned by R. A. Bowman, jr., scored an easy victory in the Sandy Spring Purse, the chief race on today's turf program. Making his third start of the meeting after having been nosed out of a purse in his previous start, the son of Ed Crump made no mistakes today and galloped off with the main prize by four lengths. His backers collected a $12.40 mutuel. H. H. Wilson's Sky Hostess, the favorite in the field of eight, managed to be up in time to win a photo decision for the place from H. O. Wilt's Lead Please.

Lead Please, under Jockey Buddy Root's handling, broke on top from the No. 1 post position and set a strong early pace. Schley Goree, in contrast to his last outing, when he was rushed along in front, was taken under steadying restraint by Jockey Willie Nertney. Enthusiasm and Sky Hostess were closest to the leader with Schley Goree fourth as the field went into the backstretch.

When Nertney asked Schley Goree for his real speed, he bounded past Lead Please and began opening a long gap. Jockey Johnny Shanks never gave up working on Sky Hostess and he managed to drive a nostril in front of Lead Please crossing the wire.

A pair of well-played horses figured in the "key" races to a $17.40 pay-off in the daily double. Jockey Woodrow Kirk started the favorite players off on the right foot by taking the first race aboard E. C. Moyer's Blankanese. In the second race, Jockey Tony Vesselli triumphed in a photo finish with Mrs. A. S. Bowman's Brainchild.

Jockey Mannie Berg, who graduated from the half-milers this year, came to the track for a visit and rode E. R. Pike's Prosit into third money in the second race. Prosit was one of the mounts that had been assigned overnight to ill-fated Lou Machado.

Brainchild (nearest rail), with Jockey Tony Vesseli up, comes with rush to win yesterday's second race and complete a $17.40 daily double. Way Out, Jockey Buddy Root up, is second with Prosit (between horses), Jockey Mannie Berg up, in third position

Driving Rain Halts Giants-Cards Twin Bill

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—A driving rain washed out the New York Giants' double-header with the St. Louis Cardinals and removed one game permanently from the Giants-Cards schedules.

One of today's games will be played at St. Louis when the Giants make their final tour of the West next months, but the other game will have to be canceled because no date for playing it off is available.

Bunty Lawless Wins Feature At Saratoga

Rex Flag Second, Sandy Boot Third In Shorthose 'Cap

By the Associated Press

Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Bunty Lawless, a colt that gained a big reputation in Canadian Stake races prior to suffering a pair of defeats at the current meeting, ran away from four other class "C" horses in the Shorthose Handicap of a mile and a furlong here today. After delaying the start for 2 minutes, W. F. Morrissey's 4-year-old dashed out in front and streamlined to a four-lengths triumph in the exceedingly short time of 1:50 4-5, only four-fifths of a second slower than the time-honored track record held by Sun Briar.

Mrs. Louise Viau's Rex Flag, a poor fourth in last Saturday's Merchants and Citizens Handicap, annexed the place by a half dozen lengths, while J. D. Norris' Sandy Boot, the 3-to-1 favorite in an open betting affair, made up a world of ground to finish third in front of Memory Book and Birthday.

Bunty Lawless, whose 1939 record now reads five triumphs in nine starts, was well backed, closing at 16 to 5. He earned a purse of $1,020.

The race produced little excitement, Bunty Lawless simply toyed with the field. Rex Flag, second all the way, never was menaced for the runner-up position. Sandy Boot could not seem to get going. He was 20 lengths behind the pace on the backstretch and "turned on" when the race was virtually over. Birthday, third into the last furlong, stopped badly.

Fifth Straight At Pawtucket To Carnarvon

Favorite Catches Stage Beauty in Final Few Yards

By the Associated Press

Pawtucket, R. I., Aug. 31.—W. F. Mannagh's Carnarvon scored his fifth consecutive victory today in the featured Concord Purse on Narragansett's muddy track.

Backed down to 4½ to 10, Carnarvon was half a length in front of Mrs. P. A. Shaw's Stage Beauty at the finish of the 6 furlongs for 3-year-olds and up. Four lengths farther back was I. J. Collins' Dale K., which had three lengths on the A. C. C. Stable's Ace Call. There were only five in the race after Weston Adams' Chief Nadi unseated Jockey M. Roberts as he came out of the gate.

Stage Beauty and Dale K fought for command down the backstretch, with Carnarvon just back of them. Approaching the far turn, Jockey Chuck Charlton sent Carnarvon up on the outside and had Dale K beaten at the quarter pole and caught Stage Beauty in the final run to the wire. Carnarvon's time was 1:15 3-5. He paid $2.90, $2.30 and $2.20. Stage Beauty paid $3.20 and $2.30, and Dale K, 2.60.

Capital Bank Marks Golden Jubilee Today

H. H. McKee, President, Has Been With the Bank From Its Opening Day

The National Capital Bank, at 316 Pennsylvania avenue southeast, will start its fifty-first year of business today.

The bank's fiftieth anniversary will pass without celebration, said President H. H. McKee. "We have no plans for celebrating. We will keep the door open, do the day's work, carry on as usual."

Mr. McKee started as a bookkeeper the day the bank opened, September 1, 1889, and since then has filled every position there. He has been president for the past 25 years.

Despite Mr. McKee's denial that his and the bank's golden jubilee would be observed without ceremony, it was learned that the bank's directors, officers and employes would present a gift to the president this afternoon in commemoration of the double anniversaries.

In recalling the progress of the bank, McKee said that on the opening day, 50 years ago, the bank had received about $150,000 in deposits, and now has nearly $2,500,000 in deposits.

The bank opened in a three-story brick building on the northeast corner of Third street and Pennsylvania avenue southeast, officials said. The upper floors of the structure were occupied by lodge rooms. Eighteen months later the bank moved to its present building.

Two founders of the bank are still active in its direction. They are Dr. William P. C. Hazen, now first vice president and a member of the board, and Allen C. Clark, board member, both of Washington.

Chesapeake & Potomac Tel. Co.

Charles A. Robinson, general manager of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., reported yesterday that the operating revenues of the company for July amounted to $979,684, and that operating expenses for the same period were $709,383. Operating revenues in July, 1938, were $907,659, and operating expenses were $667,371. Taxes for the month amounted to $107,652, or an increase of $17,293 over July, 1938, and interest deductions were $44,759, leaving a balance before dividend of $122,484, which compares with $118,247 in July last year. There were 245,957 telephones in service in Washington at the end of July, 1939, which was an increase of 216 telephones over the previous month.

War And U. S. Industry

A war in Europe would have mixed consequences upon the various divisions of American industry, according to a survey of Fenner & Beane, members of the New York Stock Exchange. Assuming that the neutrality act would be revised and that the United States would not be drawn into a war at least for a time, Fenner & Beane concludes that most heavy industry in the United States would benefit from the stimulus of war demand, including particularly the aircraft, chemical, machinery nonferrous metals, petroleum, railroad equipment and steel industries.

It is pointed out however that the important market for motion picture films of American producers would be seriously impaired with unfavorable consequences to earnings of the motion picture industry. The agricultural implement and the office equipment industries, both of which have important sales markets abroad, would likewise suffer through disruption of channels of trade, with an offset possible, over a period of time, in enlarged sales in the South American markets where competition from German products have been very severe.

Auto Trade Meeting

Members of the Washington Auto Trade Association will hold a luncheon at the Hay-Adams House today at 12:30 in the grill room.

Idl eBank Funds Rise to New Peak

The Federal Reserve Board said last night that lendable excess reserves of the bank had increased $60,000,000 to a new record high of $4,800,000,000 in the week ended August 30.

The board also said that the 12 Federal Reserve banks had increased their holdings of Treasury notes by $3,000,000 and of Treasury bonds by $1,000,000, and had decreased holdings of Treasury bills $56,000,000.

Brokers' Loans Drop $22,000,000 in Week

By the Associated Press

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that last week's loans to brokers and dealers on securities held by reporting member banks in New York City totaled $467,000,000.

The week ended yesterday and the total represented a decrease of $22,000,000 when compared with the previous week. Loans for the corresponding week a year ago totaled by $1,000,000.

W. C. Potter Heads Bank War Committee

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—William C. Potter, chairman of Guaranty Trust Co., of New York, today was elected chairman of the general committee of bankers and securities men formed yesterday to co-operate with the Federal Reserve Bank of New York on problems which might arise in money markets in the event of European war.

Leon Fraser, president of First National Bank of New York, was elected vice chairman of the committee.

Business Index Dips During Week

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—Time Magazine's index of business conditions declined last week to 99.7 from 100.4 the previous week. Spending activity in financial centers, as reflected by bank debits, contracted appreciably, while trade center spending during the last three weeks has been less than in the comparable weeks of July.

Time's index, derived from money and banking figures, reports not on business volume, but on changes in underlying conditions likely to affect the volume of U. S. business.

Britain Closes London Exchange Indefinitely

London, Aug 31 (AP).—The London Stock Exchange will be closed tomorrow, shortening the trading week by one day. Transportation facilities will be so occupied with the evacuation of children from London tomorrow that normal exchange dealings would be rendered extremely difficult.

No date was fixed for the reopening of the exchange although the governing committee yesterday expressed the hope trading could be resumed immediately after whatever period might be required for evacuation. The text of the committee resolution was:

"1. That the government having ordered the evacuation of London to be begun tomorrow, Friday, September 1, the stock exchange will be closed in accordance with the notice members have already received.

"2. That as therein stated members are informed that until further notice from the committee the settlement of open bargains will be suspended and there will be no obligation on members to open their offices.

"3. That members will be informed by rule passed of the date when the stock exchange will be reopened."

War Risk Rates To South America Sharply Advanced

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—With Italian and German vessels already unable to obtain war risk insurance, American marine underwriters today raised the war rates on the cargoes of ships plying between North and South America.

The war risk rates on United States' or Latin American ships in this trade was raised to 12½ cents per $100 valuation of shipment from 5 cents, while the rate in ships of all other nations (except Germany and Italy) was raised to 25 cents from 5 cents.

Rate between North America and Central America or the West Indies remains at 5 cents for United States and Latin American vessels, but was increased to 12½ cents for the ships of all other nations.

The rise is the first in intercoastal trade since 1918. Underwriters said it was due to the reported presence of German submarines in South Atlantic waters. Complete refusal of war risk insurance to German and Italian vessels is due to the patrolling activities of British warships in the same areas.

Sinclair Rescinds Crude Oil Cut

Tulsa, Okla., Aug. 31 (AP).—Sinclair-Prairie Oil Marketing Co., leader in the crude price reduction which resulted in a six-State oil production shutdown, rescinded today its 20-cent a barrel slash.

Stocks Hold Fairly Firm in Crisis No Fear of Selling Wave Here Treasury Bonds Decline Again

New York, Aug. 31.—Markets gave ground again today as the tension over Europe's troubles reached a new high but they did so grudgingly. Recessions were small, the trading was orderly and on the Stock Exchange it was extremely dull, only 457,890 shares changing hands. If it is to be war, there is at least the satisfaction of reasonable assurance that the financial machinery of this city and of the country will be able to function smoothly, in contrast with the condition which existed in 1914 and with the emergency closing of the London Exchange today.

Investors do not fear a wave of foreign liquidating sales such as that which forced our exchange to close in 1914 and the prevailing dullness and relative firmness indicates that our market is in a technical position to stand a shock. Even if the London exchange is kept closed after the week-end the purported plan there to mobilize British-owned foreign securities, giving the holders an equivalent amount of new defense bonds, will stem any sudden offering of such securities in this market. To use a word that has become trite from overwork, Wall street is "calm."

In all fields of finance today the pattern was one of preparation for war. No efforts were made to rally the stock list as it edged gradually lower, closing off an average of 0.52 point. Stocks of companies which might conceivably benefit from a conflict were as soft as the others, the aviations being one of the weak features.

September Financing

United States Government bonds declined again, not being helped by the report from Washington that the Treasury might be able to avoid its customary September financing. The worry of the holders of these and other high grade bonds is that war will bring higher interest rates, through cutting down gold imports and through inflation.

There were naturally far more repercussions of the war tension in the London market than was the case here. In addition to the emergency action of closing the London exchange today, with no date set for its reopening, the weekly statement of the Bank of England showed that note circulation had soared to an all-time high. Gold holdings were increased through the expedients adopted to limit the outflow of capital and the rediscount rate of 4 per cent established a week ago remained unchanged. Gold in the London open market was priced at 159 shillings, a rise of 6 pence from Wednesday, while silver declined. The pound wobbled around and finally closed at $4.34, off 6 cents after being off 12½ cents earlier in the day.

Financial Defense

To help meet the shock in the event of war, Wall Street completed the formation of a laison group to act between it and Washington. Officials of the stock exchange and of the Securities and Exchange Commission also have been studying the problem of keeping the wheels of finance running smoothly and they have made careful plans to enable the New York market to remain open.

Reflecting the tension was another upward revision in war risk insurance rates on shipments to Swedish ports on the Baltic Sea. The increase on South American shipments was the second in two days, prior to which there hadn't been a change for more than 20 years. Local underwriters also established a policy of quoting rates for seven days only after the date of declaration instead of the customary 30 days, a precaution which they did not adopt at the time of the Munich crisis.

Domestic Business Better

Domestic business continues to improve, but it is realized that if the war jitters continue they will interfere seriously with the normal conduct of trade. The weekly announcement on car loadings today showed an increase of 2.1 per cent over the previous week and a new high. Department store sales showed a greater than seasonal improvement for the month of August. Engineering construction gained 9 per cent over the previous year.

Declines of most leaders in the stock exchange were held to fractions, but a few lost 1 to 2 points. Loft was again the most active issue, losing a fraction. Chrysler and General Motors were off fractions. Steel lost nearly a point and Bethlehem 1¼. Anaconda and Nickel were off a point each. Westinghouse dropped 1⅜ and Telephone 2.

Commodities reflected nervousness. Wheat advanced early as much as 1⅞ cents a bushel, but was unable to retain this amount, closing up ½ to 1¼ cents. Cotton was sensitive to the foreign news, but came back after an early loss of 8 to 10 points, to close unchanged to 4 points higher.

Polish and German Bonds Lower

Listed bonds tumbled today, as the European war clouds settled ever lower. Foreign dollar obligations dropped 1 to 8 points, with all groups affected save the Japanese issues, which advanced on the formation of a "moderate" cabinet. United States Treasury obligations declined fractionally, despite intimations that there will be no financing this month. Domestic corporation bonds were marked down much as were equities, largely on a precautionary basis. Turnover was $3,450,000.

Polish bonds fell 1 to 5 points, as pressure on that country increased. Italians were fairly steady, but German issues receded and in some cases moved into low ground of the year. Scandinavian, Belgian, Canadian and Australian bonds were all weak, and here also some lows were registered. Japanese bonds moved forward 2 to 4 points. Latin-American issues drifted downward with the main groups.

Treasury Loans Decline

United States Treasury bonds dropped 2-32 to 30-32 point, in quiet dealings, which were not much influenced by the intimations that September financing will be omitted. Guaranteed bonds of the farm and home corporations were marked lower. Small recessions also were the rule among the best-rated corporate bonds, but occasional issues were off a point or more.

Speculative railroad bonds were inactive, but almost all trades resulted in small recessions. Interborough and Manhattan Railway issues were firm in the local traction group, while B.-M. T. and Third avenue issues receded. Holding company bonds and industrial convertibles fell, along with their related equities. Other special groups were neglected.

'Big Board' Asks For Reserve Fund Against Failures

New York, Aug. 30 (AP).—Creation of a special reserve fund by the New York Stock Exchange "to facilitate liquidation or mergers of member firms in a vulnerable position" was recommended today as a means of increasing "the adequacy of customer protection" in the stock market.

The recommendation was made by the public examining board headed by Roswell Magill, former Undersecretary of the United States Treasury, which was named by the exchange July 14 last to study the feasibility of a "brokerage bank."

The board, in the course of its report, suggested that "continued self-policing by the stock exchange of its member firms was a more practical means of increasing customer protection than either the establishing of a "brokerage bank" or State and Federal examination and supervision of brokerage house banking activities.

Wheat Prices Close Higher On War News

Advances as Much as 1⅞ Cents a Bushel But Loses Some of Gain

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Aug. 31.—Grain traders took a more pessimistic view of Europe's crisis today and while their buying lifted wheat prices as much as 1⅞ cents the market exhibited extreme nervousness and could not retain all the advance.

Closing quotations of 68@67¾ for September, 68½@68¾ for December and 69⅛@69 for May were ½@1¼ cent higher than yesterday but ⅜@1 cent lower than the highs established early in the session. British war preparations, including closing of the stock exchange tomorrow, and other disquieting news attracted much attention but the market also had to digest operations in connection with proximity of the September delivery period. Notices of intention to deliver enough wheat tomorrow to satisfy contracts involving 6,062,000 bushels were posted after the market closed.

Other grains advanced with wheat but rye was able to retain a good portion of the gain. Corn closed unchanged to ¼ higher compared with yesterday's finish. September 43¾. December 44@44⅛; oats ⅛ lower to ⅜ higher; rye ½ higher, and provisions 10@12 higher.

August Bond Sales Smallest in 21 Years

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—August bond sales, the New York Stock Exchange reported today, were $111,416,850, face value, the smallest for any month since July, 1918. Wall Street thought wariness induced by war fears was the cause. This compared with $119,431,000 in July and $120,363,000 in August, 1938.

A decrease in stock transactions was also regarded as due to the European crisis. A total of 17,372,281 shares of stock were traded in August, compared with 18,067,920 in July and 20,728,160 in August, 1938.

Steel Employment Increases in July

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—The American Iron & Steel Institute reported today the average number of employes in the steel industry increased during July to 453,000, compared with 451,000 in June and 424,000 in July, 1938.

Because of the fourth of July week-end, steel payrolls for the month declined to $59,900,000 from $61,150,000 in June, but were 30 per cent greater than the $45,802,000 paid in July, 1938.

Bituminous Production

The National Coal Association estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended August 26 as approximately 7,600,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week: 1938, 6,535,000 tons; 1937, 8,018,000 tons. Percentage of change: 1938, increase 16.3 per cent; 1937, decrease 5.2 per cent.

Cotton Futures Edge Higher in Late Trading

New York, Aug. 31 (AP).—Cotton futures snapped out of morning declines ranging 8 to 10 points today when a last-minute buying flurry left prices unchanged to 4 points up.

The sharp runup just before the final bell was due to heavy purchases of the July contract, believed to be for Wall street interests. The advance was given impetus as short holders scurried to cover commitments before the market closed.

Price trends earlier in the day had been tempered largely by nervous buying and selling under influence of changing rumors concerning Europe.

The market ignored sharp advances at Liverpool predicated on a fresh drop in the pound sterling.

Crude oil sold in the Southeast and Valley at 4½ cents and in Texas at 4⅝ cents.

Smith, Murphy Gain Virginia Tennis Finals

Washington Players Also Advance to Finals in Doubles

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Fredericksburg, Va., Aug. 31.—Alphonso Smith and Dick Murphy, both Washington tennis players, will meet in the singles finals of the Northern Virginia Open tennis tournament as the result of easy victories here this afternoon. The pair, as a doubles team, also advanced to the finals.

Smith, defending champion, had little trouble in trimming Bobby Leitch, Richmond City and southside Virginia champion. The score was 6—2, 6—2.

The match between Murphy and Dick Johnson, Richmond Junior champion, was closer than the score would indicate. Murphy, a veteran of many tournaments, however, won the first set 6—3 and the second 6—1. Smith and Murphy advanced into the finals of the doubles by trimming Peck Garrett, Fredericksburg, and Brokie Lamb, Richmond, 6—0, 6—0. Their opponents will be the team of Leith and Johnson, of Richmond, who beat Dr. L. T. E. Thompson and Frazier Thompson, of Dahlgren, 6—3, 6—0, this afternoon.

Finals will take place at the Mansfield Hall Country Club courts Tuesday afternoon.

Tru-Blu Ten, Nates and Leon Meet Tonight

Glen Leyde's All-Stars and Tru-Blu will see action tonight at the Ballston Ball Park, Arlington, at 8 and 9 p. m., respectively, against the strong Hoffberger Fuel and the Nates and Neon teams, of Baltimore.

The All-Stars are reputed to be the strongest softball team ever organized in the District, and if anyone has any doubt, a glance at the potent line-up would remove all misapprehension. Aquilino and Zanelotti, of Plaza Wine & Liquor; Harold Steffes, of the Maritime Commission; Jarrell and Mathias, of Carr & Boswell; Bill Edwards, of Golub's Market; Barry, Schoonover and Weigel, of the Aggies; Plaisted, Bauers and Frankie, of I. B. M., and Hook, Allen, White and Price, of the Arlington Democrats, comprise the squad.

The feature game of the evening will be between newly crowned champions as Tru-Blu, Mid-Atlantic champions and undefeated finalist for the District championship, clashes with Nates and Leons, 1939 Maryland State champions. In the previous engagement between these two teams in the Mid-Atlantic Softball Tournament, Tru-Blu won in the last inning, 2 to 1, after Perlman, Nates and Leon's star pitcher, had been spiked at home plate and forced from the game. Both teams engaged in a heated argument as Bovello scored the winning run after allegedly being "hipped" at third and blocked on the way home by at least three opposing players. A few fists were swung, but participants were separated before any serious damage was done.

Receipts of the game will be turned over to the team winning the District championship to aid it on its trip to Chicago for the world's championships.

maker of three-base hits, pounded a triple against the left-center scoreboard to open the inning and then Johnny Welaj scored him with a single to center. Bobby Estalella reached for an outside pitch and singled to right to move Welaj to third. Charley Gelbert flied to Walker in short left and Welaj held third, but Estalella was doubled up at second when he tried to advance, Appling cutting off Walker's throw and rifling it to Hayes. But Jimmy Bloodworth contributed a single to center that scored Welaj with the second run of the inning.

Johnny Marcum held the Nats in check in the last three innings when they muffed two scoring chances. Appling's error put Case on base with one out in the seventh and he stole second promptly, but he was out trying to steal third. And in the ninth, Ferrell doubled and Leonard beat out an infield hit with two out, but Case left them stranded.

Leonard put himself into trouble in the seventh when he hit Gerald Walker mildly on the head with a knuckle ball and then pitched a three-bagger to Rosenthal that scored Walker. But with none as yet out, the Dutchman bore down and retired the next three batters without damage.

In the eighth, with two out, the Sox shoved across a luck-anointed run. Kreevich's grounder took a freak hop off Gelbert's knee and evolved as a fluke double. Appling scored him with a single and cut the Nats' lead to 4-3. In the ninth, though, they couldn't get to first base against Leonard.

Governor Winship Says Good-by to Official Life at Party Given Here by Puerto Ricans

GOVERNOR WINSHIP M. A. GARCIA MENDEZ REAR ADMIRAL LEAHY

At the farewell party given Gov. Winship by the Puerto Rican Trade Counsel. Rear Admiral Leahy, former chief of naval operations, succeeds Winship as Governor of Puerto Rico. Mendez is Speaker of the House of Puerto Rico

In an environment of caviar, anchovies and the soft conversational hum of distinguished Puerto Ricans, Gov. Blanton Winship said good-by yesterday to official life at a party tendered him at the Mayflower Hotel.

The farewell party, given by the Puerto Rican Trade Counsel, was attended by Rear Admiral William D. Leahy, former Chief of Naval Operations and successor of Winship as Governor of Puerto Rico.

Others there were Jose Ramirez Santibanez, president, Puerto Rican liberal party; George T. Summerlin, State Department chief of protocol; Oscar Chapman, assistant Secretary of the Interior; Enrique Ortega, Puerto Rican director of tourists, and Dr. Thomas Cajigas, prominent islander.

Gov. Winship said: "I am giving it up to Admiral Leahy and am glad to leave it in such good hands." He said he would go to Georgia soon, meet old acquaintances and do some bird shooting. Admiral Leahy said he was studying the island's needs —many of them very obvious, he said—and will take his post "with an open mind." He sails September 7.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

Young men and women interested in social and penal problems now are offered a chance to make correctional work a career in the Prison Service. A civil service examination will be given for the filling of more than 400 jobs as junior custodial officer in the Federal prisons under the Justice Department, Attorney General Frank Murphy announced yesterday.

For both men and women, the starting salary is $1,860 a year. Persons will be selected not only on the basis of their ability to perform the duties of junior custodial officer, but also upon their qualifications for promotion to higher positions, says the announcement.

The Bureau of Prisons, it should be said, came in for some harsh publicity in recent years because of the long hours worked by the guards and certain other of the personnel. It was widely commented that the guards were putting in as many hours as the prisoners. These conditions, however, are more than gradually being eliminated. And the truth is that the bureau was never itself to blame. It appropriations were comparatively small and the expansion of prison facilities was far beyond the Bureau's power to pay for increased personnel.

But concerning the new jobs: "This important Government bureau is entirely on a merit basis of appointment and promotion. This is in keeping with the general personnel policy of the department, and is another step in the direction of raising the standard of the employes of Government," the Attorney General said.

Persons appointed will have a prescribed course of training, whereupon—if they show ability—they can advance to positions in the higher salary brackets. These not only include administrative positions in the custodial service, but others in the field of education, social work, parole, recreation, culinary service, accounting and farm activities, it was said.

Physical requirements will be rigid. Applicants must have reached their twenty-fifth birthday, while the top age will be 45. Six new Federal penal institutions are now under construction, and these must be fully staffed by next spring. Besides, there are many vacancies in the older institutions. The 400 persons mentioned here will be selected from among the successful candidates on the junior custodial officer examination for immediate employment. Thereafter, selections will be made on the basis of the needs in the service.

A mental test will be given to measure the fitness of applicants. They must have completed a four-year high school course, or 14 units of high school study.

Other jobs: Inspector of hats, inspector of miscellaneous supplies (hosiery and knit underwear), inspector of textiles and inspector of clothing, all at a salary of $2,000 a year; junior inspector of textiles and junior inspector of clothing, $1,620 a year. These civil service positions are slated under the Quartermaster Corps, War Department, with employment at the Quartermaster Depot, Philadelphia.

"Years of Adventures in Our National Parks" will be discussed by Col. John R. White, acting director, NPS, at a campfire program in the Sylvan Theater of the Washington Monument Grounds tonight. The talk will be out of his personal recollections. During his 20 years with the NPS, he has become an authority on the parks and his experiences afford good lecture material. Before being transferred to Washington, Col. White was superintendent of Sequoia and Death Valley National Parks in California. If the weather is unfavorable, the talk will be made in the Interior Auditorium, Eighteenth and C streets northwest, at 8:15 p. m.

The naturalist program of the National Capital Parks calls for a bird walk Sunday morning, from 5:30 to 7 o'clock. Such birds as are not in town waking up the sleepers, will be studied in their haunts on the Tow Path along the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal Parkway, near Sycamore Island, Md. The meeting place of the walkers will be the Sycamore Island car stop No. 30, Cabin John car. On Sunday afternoon, 2:30 to 4:30, a tree walk will be sponsored through Lafayette Park in front of the White House.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

Even a magician would puzzle over the play of today's hand, which let South make his fantastic contract of six diamonds.

West led the club nine, hoping to fool declarer as to the location of the king. He succeeded in fooling his partner who let it ride. Declarer, dumfounded, won the trick with the jack. Even with this gift from the enemy, one look at the dummy assured him he was way over his head.

Today's Hand

Pass	2 ◇	Pass	3 ♠

Opening lead: 9 ♣.

He led the king of diamonds, played another round, winning the ace and East showed out, discarding a spade. This was a bit of bad luck he had not counted on. It developed later to be the salvation of the contract.

A little club went to the ace, and the losing club was ruffed in dummy. Then the ace, king, queen of spades were run, declarer discarding three hearts. The spade eight came next. East covered with the jack. South trumped and West overtrumped with the diamond queen. West was now on the spot, or so he thought, for a lead. He visualized declarer holding ace-queen of hearts, over his king. He had forgotten his partner had chucked a spade, making the inoffensive three a winner and wishing anything but to forfeit his king, he played the king of clubs.

Declarer, who had been tensely awaiting West's lead, started at the club king and then pinched himself sharply. Could it be true? Was he not, like parched victims of the desert, witnessing a mirage? He picked up the card and peered at it; it, indeed, was the club king. Carefully, lest this great opportunity slip out of his fingers, he trumped in dummy and discarded the jack of hearts from his hand. He led the three of spades and threw off his heart queen; twelve tricks were won; the slam was made.

ADRIANA

By George Dyer

A Story of Love and Intrigue in Vineyard Sound

Chapter 20

I POINTED this out to the girl. She didn't mind it a bit. We were practically standing across the breadth of the boat, our backs leaning against the port rail, head and shoulders in the wind and sunlight and flung spray. I was clinging to whatever came under my hands. Both of Adriana's hands were locked on the tiller, with unexpected tendons and knuckles showing white through the delicate skin, and responding to the feel of the boat as sensitively as an ammeter answers to a varying current passing through it. The girl had forgotten Mr. Raskin and the Patria, forgotten the nightmare of the corpse in the tide race, forgotten everything except the obliterating ecstasy of driving a beautiful big boat for every last bit she was worth. Even I felt a new excitement at the silent speed and power of this craft that had sprung alive beneath us, but it was not strong enough to make me forget why we were pushing the Adriana so hard.

DYER

Over my shoulder I could see the Patria perhaps a mile behind us, not heeled under her sails as we were, but plainly nearer than the last time I looked. Of course, there was an engine in her.

We were now approaching the middle of the Sound, but the plug of fog in Quicks Hole still appeared very far away. I found it impossible to guess whether we should be overtaken before reaching it or not.

The girl and I hadn't much to say to each other for some time, but finally I said:

"Haven't we any more sail we can put on?"

Adriana shook her head doubtfully.

"We have a Genoa jib below which would help us if it were set and pulling in place of the working jib. But I'm afraid we'd lose more time changing than we'd gain by the change."

She remembered the Patria, and looked astern.

"He's overhauling us, isn't he?" she asked.

"I think so," I admitted.

"What do you suppose he wants of us?"

"Maybe he's had the bright idea of making us an offer of some sort to keep quiet about what we saw this morning," I said, not half believing it.

"Of course," said Adriana, "we are the only people outside of them," she jerked her head toward the pursuing craft, "who saw it."

"How do you figure that?"

"But of course. The fishermen all went out of the Basin before light. They always do. But even suppose there were any stragglers, high tide was at about 6:30. When we came out three hours later that thing was just beginning to show. Any earlier it would have been under water."

"And what's more," I added to her argument, "the whole village would have been aroused if any one had seen it before we did."

WE SHARED another long silence, in which I liked the probable shape of things to come less and less. The Patria seemed to be swelling visibly. Two black figures stood in her bows against the shine of the straining sail. They made me think of the picture by Maxfield Parrish showing pirates bearing down on a merchantman. The shelter of the fog in Quicks Hole appeared no nearer.

"How far would you say they were behind us?" she asked.

"Fifteen hundred yards, do you think?" I said.

"I suppose so."

"How far is it to Quicks?"

"A good two miles."

"Of course," said I, "maybe we ought to heave to anyway and parley with them. Perhaps without knowing it we have something on Mr. Raskin which will make him easier to handle than he was the other day."

This suggestion I tried to make sound as nonchalant as possible. But Adriana said:

"He threatened you to keep quiet, this morning."

"Yes, but now he may be thinking better of it. I surprised him. He didn't have time to think."

The girl, shaking a little from the tremble the racing yawl sent into her body through the tiller and her arms, but with her face as unshaken as it had been on the voyage through the northeaster, only said:

"He wouldn't have risked a threat if he hadn't been desperate to cover up that body. He or Big Jack must have cast it loose into the ebb just before you came in sight. He probably doesn't want it to turn up again, ever. But if it does turn up, he wants it to happen anywhere along the coast except on the property of the Sea Reduction Corporation."

She glanced at me, and then slowly turned her head away to look at the Patria. All elation had died in her eyes. I said:

"The trouble is, we don't know exactly why he's anxious to lose the body. So it's hard to tell what price he's willing to pay to cover up."

"And," said Adriana, "if it's just that he doesn't want it connected with the Sea Reduction Co.'s property, he must realize that we are the only people in the world who know that it was caught fast on the company's waterfront this morning."

THIS WAS a logical conclusion I wouldn't have brought into the conversation if she hadn't seen straight through to it. And I had no desire to carry it in the open through the few logical (and unpleasant) steps further that my mind had already taken it. So I kept quiet, and so did the girl.

At the moment the wind flawed suddenly, the mainboom dragged in the waves, a barrelful of water sloshed into the cockpit, and the girl and I became too concentrated on our sailing to discuss the general situation any further. Afterwards I kept quiet, and so did she.

I hoped, against my better judgment, that the growing strain of driving the yawl would keep Adriana from thinking. Unfortunately, it didn't keep me.

Assume the worst: the body we had seen was the body of a murdered man. The step beyond was, of course, that the men pressing hotly after us would not stop at murder. And what is a couple of more murders to a murderer already?

How do I know our friend Mr. Raskin did it? I don't; but why was he so all-fired anxious to dispose of the mangled evidence? O. K., pal; then if he's so anxious to dispose of the evidence, why isn't he equally anxious to dispose of the only two people who saw that evidence? And why not more so still if those two happen to be the only people with reason to question his possession of the Sea Reduction Corporation? If this isn't so, why is he chasing hell-for-leather after us?

And plainly about to overtake us, too, damn him. And me with nothing more deadly than a belaying pin on board, in case it should come to gunplay. And, Mr. Raskin being the precious sort of guy he was, that's probably what it would come to . . .

What made me maddest was that I could see clearly how fatal a tactical error we had made in turning and running from superior speed in this direction. We should have hugged the populated fringes of the Vineyard, instead of heading for an empty strait between the desolate uninhabited islands of Pasque and Nashawena. There, if Mr. Raskin had any serious evil intention, he would not be hampered in the execution of it by the presence of witnesses on shore.

THE WORST of it was not that I had made a mistake which promised to put me in trouble up to my nose, or over it, but that I had dragged this swell kid at my side into the mess, as well. I looked at her, standing taut against the downpull of the tiller, so straight and brave and young and nice, and knew I had never found any one in my life to like half as well, or admire half as much.

And she could think as straight and face an ugly fact as squarely as she looked at you, because after a little she said:

"You know, that man wants to get rid of this boat, too, for some reason. Either for a few days, or for good. I don't know why, of course, but I'm sure now he deliberately tried to sink her in the Basin yesterday."

"What makes you sure?"

"There's no other answer to what happened. When he first turned his motor on, pretending to be trying to check the Patria's sternway, the gears were in reverse. I thought at the time I was mistaken, but I wasn't. It was only at the last he threw her into forward speed, to make a show of white water under her counter just before she struck. He meant to sink your yawl if he could."

This was one step further than I had yet gone, and the girl went on from there:

"That means that it won't be enough for us to beat him into the fog. We'll have to get into the fog with enough distance between us so that he absolutely can't see us. Otherwise, we'll be just giving him the very opportunity he'd like best."

"What do you mean?" I said.

"Why, if he still wants to sink the boat, it's a perfect chance. He waits until we get into the fog, and then sticks to us until it pleases him to run us down, and then, well, he simply spins his wheel and runs us down. Just a collision in the fog; they happen all the time. Then, if he feels he can risk his word against ours, he picks us out of the water and takes us on board—or else . . ."

I looked in those blue eyes and saw that she was not fooling herself any more than I was.

"Or else," I said.

We both looked back at the Patria. She was about a thousand yards away. Mr. Raskin was in the bow and he had what appeared to be a rifle in his hands. Maybe it was a stick, or a boat hook, but maybe also it was a rifle.

"Of course," said Adriana, quietly. "At this rate, unless something happens, he'll catch us before we get into the fog, anyway."

Which was my idea, too.

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

Capital Plans Outings Over Labor Day

Many Qualifying Holiday on Whether Europe Goes to War

Frayed by a week of war-crisis excitement and a month of sweltering temperatures, Washingtonians yesterday made plans for what they hoped would be a nerve-resting Labor Day week-end.

Among the hopefuls were State Department officials and President Roosevelt, who is tentatively counting on going to Hyde Park for his annual Labor Day picnic there.

While excursions and short trips promised to be as numerous as in other years, many admitted that "if war comes" they would stay home to "listen and read about it."

Look to Next Week

School groups who had hoped to go abroad to study and Washingtonians whose ships to Europe and Bermuda are staying in harbor were consoling themselves with still-optimistic views of what next week has to offer.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, calling for a reverent observance of "Labor Sunday," issued a statement terming "lack of brotherhood" the most menacing evil from which the world is suffering.

"This lack," the statement declared, "is conspicuous in the relationship between race and race, nation and nation, employer and worker."

The American Federation of Government Employes, taking advantage of one of the few holidays to fall on Monday, scheduled a trip to the World's Fair. Special coaches will leave Union Station at 1:30 p. m. Saturday and New York at 6:30 p. m. Monday.

Mrs. Guerry Smith, who was one of the runners-up in the "brains-and-beauty" contest of the Federation, will serve as hostess. Honor guest will be Miss Ida Hines, who was named the "most conscientious" Government worker.

Stores will be closed all day Monday, but will be open Saturday, it was announced by Edwin D. Shaw, secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

The Ladies Aid Society of the German Orphan Home, at 2200 Good Hope road, will hold its annual Labor Day picnic, it was announced yesterday.

Wanderbirds Plan Outings

The Wanderbirds have scheduled two outings. The first will be a 4-mile hike Sunday morning, starting at the National Theater at 10 a. m. and ending with a swim near Riggs road. The hike will be along the valley of the Northwest Branch, from Burnt Mills, Md. On Labor Day they will swim at Chapel Point, Md.

All library branches will be closed Monday, Miss Clara W. Herbert, acting librarian, announced.

A Labor Day program in honor of Senator Norris, of Nebraska, will be held at Norris Dam, with numerous Government representatives in attendance.

The National Air Races at Cleveland, Saturday through Monday, were credited by airway officials with much of the exceedingly heavy bookings by air over the week-end.

Motorists expecting to travel over the newly-completed last section of Skyline Drive were warned by park officials to be particularly careful along the southern section because guard rails have not yet been installed and in many places there are drops of 100 to 200 feet.

Daylight Bandit Kidnaps Motorist, Takes Car and $46

Under threat of death, William C. Nemeth, 25-year-old War Department clerk, late yesterday afternoon was forced to surrender his car and $46 to a young bandit who jumped into his machine as it stopped for a traffic light at Thirteenth and M streets northwest.

Nemeth told police the holdup man—described as about 25 and well dressed—pressed a "hard object" in his side and ordered him to drive out Rhode Island avenue. At about Eighth street, Nemeth reported, the bandit took over the wheel and drove to the District line, where he shoved Nemeth out of the car and sped away into Maryland.

Throughout the ride, investigators were told, the youth threatened to kill Nemeth if he didn't obey commands and just before ordering him from the car, rifled his pockets.

The robber was of medium build with light hair and wore a seersucker suit.

Hitler 'Ready for 10-Year War;' Gets British-French Ultimatum

London, Paris Expect Warning To Be Ignored; Cities Black Out

By Ralph W. Barnes.
Special Cable to The Post

London (Saturday), Sept. 2 (Passed by Censor).—Great Britain and France yesterday dispatched identic ultimatums to Fuehrer Hitler, demanding that he suspend immediately the swift invasion of Poland which he began yesterday morning, and withdraw his troops from Polish territory.

It was reported from Berlin that when Sir Nevile Henderson, British Ambassador to Germany, handed the British note to Joachim von Ribbentrop, German foreign minister, the latter said he would have to refer the communication to Hitler.

"Lights of Reason" Dimming

If Der Fuehrer's response is "no," Britain and France will be at war with the Third Reich, and Europe will have been plunged into a conflict which is calculated to prove most destructive, if not longer, than that which began a quarter of a century ago.

Once again, as Sir Edward Grey, foreign secretary, said at the beginning of August, 1914, "the lights of reason are going out all over Europe."

The British press today, virtually with one voice, accepted war as inevitable, and charged the responsibility to the ambition sof Adolf Hitler.

Speaking last night before a tense but resolute House of Commons, one of whose number, at least, was in the uniform of the British army, 70-year-old Prime Minister Chamberlain expressed the view the reply of the German dictator was not likely to be otherwise than unfavorable.

He added that, in case of a negative reply, both Henderson and his French colleague, Robert Coulondre, had been instructed to ask for their passports.

Will Brook No Delay

No time limit for the replies was fixed in the identic notes, but it was understood that both Ambassadors had been instructed to indicate to the German government that London and Paris would not brook delay.

"In that case, we are ready," Chamberlain said simply.

With the British and French fighting forces already approaching war footing, general mobilization to complete the process was announced in both yesterday.

Since early yesterday morning an army of teachers and volunteer workers has been engaged in evacuating from London and other large cities more than 3,000,000 school children, mothers with infants, the crippled and the blind. Three full days will be required for the process to be completed.

Yet the capital and other cities have been plunged since dusk last night in a weird approach to pitch darkness as the first real blackout went into effect. It was feared that the enemy-to-be might begin a bombing attack over these isles before daylight.

Balloon Defense In Air

Sausage balloons in London's balloon barrage were hoisted high into the clouds long before dark, and throughout the day and night heavily reinforced crews were manning anti-aircraft batteries.

Legislation was introduced yesterday by Chamberlain to expand the limited conscription now in effect to make all men between the ages of 18 and 41 liable for military service, but they will be called up gradually.

Though Chamberlain's expose was received with cheers, Labor opposition benches appeared disappointed that the government had not decided for an immediate declaration of war against Germany.

There were various suggestions this morning as to why London, together with Paris, had decided against immediate action. One was that Sir John Anderson, in charge of air raid precautions, was asking for further time in which to complete the evacuation of London before the beginning of hostilities. The general staff, on the other hand, was understood to have urged an immediate declaration of war.

King George VI signed an order in council completing the mobilization of Britain's army, navy and air force. He signed the order even before the prime minister went to

Commodities, Many Stocks Soar as Bonds Sink Sharply

By the Associated Press

New York, Sept. 1.—War psychology laid violent hold on the Nation's sensitive financial and commodity markets today.

Shares in many leading corporations soared, reminiscent of the "war bride" bull market of 1915-17.

Wheat prices in all major North American markets bounced up 5 to 8 cents a bushel, the limit permitted in a single day's trading, while sensitive commodities generally experienced the sharpest rise in six years.

Meanwhile, bond prices sank severely, as investors evidently felt the costs of war might eventually mean an end to the abnormal "cheap money" era, which has pushed prime investments to the highest prices on record.

The share market experienced one of the most sudden turnabouts in its history toward the end of the session, as traders woke up to the fact that the outbreak of hostilities was not bringing a severe selling wave, as it did in 1914. Prices had dropped $1 to $7 during the earlier hours, but offerings were comparatively light.

In the last hour, excited buying appeared in steels, coppers, sugars, aircrafts and miscellaneous industrials regarded as likely to get war business. Earlier losses were largely regained, and several issues shot up $1 to $7 above yesterday's final prices.

Such activity in the speculative commodity markets had not been witnessed since the wave of "inflation" buying when the dollar was taken off the gold standard in the spring of 1933. Raw sugar futures jumped ¼ of a cent a pound, the limit permitted in a single session. The big copper companies announced they were advancing their price ¼ of a cent to 10¾ cents a pound.

Cotton, which declined during the World War, as foreign textile mills were busy with munitions, declined moderately, then came up to close 5 to 30 cents a bale higher.

German Warship Blasts Polish Depot at Gdynia; Nation 'Dazed'

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Sept. 1.—A brief communique tonight announced the bombardment and capture of Westerplatte, Polish munitions depot off Dutch Harbor, by the German cruiser Schleswig-Holstein.

The Poles held Westerplatte, a wooded peninsula near the harbor, under League of Nations authority.

Presence of the Polish military guard in the heart of the Baltic city long had been offensive to Nazis.

The Schleswig-Holstein has been in Danzig Harbor on a formal visit, begun several days ago, but with its guns in readiness.

The Nazi communique said that after a short, but sharp, bombardment of the Polish guards Westerplatte was captured.

(Last reports from Warsaw said three assaults on Westerplatte had been repulsed.)

With the German army declaring its columns were "deep in Polish territory" tonight, the German nation stood somewhat stunned and dazed at the sweep of events of the first day of undeclared war with Poland.

The people were grimly determined, however, that each man and woman would do their duty to achieve those objectives which Hitler, in an impassioned Reichstag speech, declared to be the purpose of the resort to arms.

Ready for Ten-Year War

Those objectives were reunion of Danzig with the Reich, restitution of the Polish Corridor region to Germany and a cessation of conditions along the German-Polish border which Hitler earlier described as "Macedonian," or terroristic.

A statement issued by the official D. N. B. agency said Germany is prepared, if necessary, to wage a ten-year war against Britain.

"England today is faced with a choice of whether it desires to precipitate the world into misery, but its policy of recent months and the aims it has followed leave no doubt that it does not shrink from the consequences of a European conflagration," the announcement said.

"A single and real aggressor is Great Britain . . .

"Germany is ready itself to wage a ten-year war in order to gain its rights and ultimate peace in Europe."

Goes Beyond 16 Points

From the viewpoint of military tactics, Germany went beyond Danzig and the Corridor in the first day of the undeclared war and announced the German army which advanced on Poland from east Prussia was "deep in Polish territory."

German troops were attacking all along the Polish-German frontier and were reported to have pushed into several sections of Poland. A communique from the high army command said advances of German troops and air force which started from Pomerania, Silesia and East Prussia this morning, were well under way toward their objectives.

The chief command's report on the first day's operation was especially enthusiastic in reference to the exploits of the air force. As the result of various air raids into Polish territory, including one at Warsaw, Germany was pronounced "in complete control of Polish air."

State of War Still Denied

The official interpretation on the status of relations between Poland and Germany was that there is no state of war existing. The embassies of both nations are still functioning. In fact, Polish Ambassador Jozef Lipski is understood to have made a protest at the foreign office against German military operations in Poland.

In Warsaw, too, the German embassy remains staffed.

German officialdom insists that all that happened was that Germany struck back after Poland attacked at Gleiwitz last night and consistently violated the border in recent weeks.

Informed quarters frankly admitted, however, that if, for instance, Katowice in Polish Silesia should be "liberated," it might be retained permanently by Germany.

Is Neutrality Possible?

The unbelievable has become reality. Civilization is caught in the current of the maelstrom. The outcome, for much that we take for granted and for everything we hold most dear, is wholly unpredictable.

It is a tribute to the intelligence of the American people that there is today neither the impartiality, nor the sense of remoteness from the battlefields which ruled in the early stages of the last world war. And it will be increasingly less possible to feel remote if the radio brings into our very homes the crash of bombs and eyewitness descriptions of their effects.

By the same token, with every day that German troops extend their area of conquest, it will be less possible for Americans to feel impartial. In contrast with 1914 the issues have this time been clearly posed, and the inescapable conclusions drawn, in advance of fighting. It is all too obvious that this war is a war of wanton aggression, deliberately launched by a single dictator merely because Poland heroically maintains that there must be some definite limit to his schemes of conquest.

The Poles will pay dear for their heroism. Inferior in manpower, resources and equipment, their territory will be overrun and their cities laid waste in the early stages of this war. Poland, as a self-governing nation, may even for a time cease to exist. But its people have counted the cost in advance, and made a decision of which they may well feel proud.

As Poland fights against long odds it will be increasingly realized here that a German victory would not so much augment the strength and material power of the Reich as it would fetter even more strongly on the world the shackles of a decadent and barbaric way of life. The aim of Hitler, as forcefully expressed in Mein Kampf and attested by all his actions, is to sweep into the discard every concept which is embraced in the word "democracy," substituting for them the arbitrary rule of a wholly tyrannical domination.

The eyes of Americans have been opened by achievement of the long-contemplated alliance between Nazi Germany and Communist Russia, which joins the leading totalitarian states in a union of appalling potential strength. It is at last understood that the Nazi and Communist philosophies are fundamentally identical in their hostility to democratic institutions, and their willingness to use any means in the undertaking. It is at last appreciated that the struggle of our civilization is against the theory of dictatorships, and that between those of the left and of the right there is a distinction rather than a difference.

The war of today differs from that of 25 years ago not only because it threatens to be even more horrible, but even more because it is essentially an ideological war. And in that war no country is more threatened than the United States. Everything asserted in our Declaration of Independence, everything promulgated by our Constitution, is given the lie by Nazi doctrine. According to Mein Kampf the United States is not even a nation, but a pitiful experiment in racial bastardy, with which Germany need not concern itself until the time is ripe.

If the Nazis win the war on which they are now gleefully embarked, the day of reckoning will be much closer for the country which we have been proud to call a melting pot. If Germany wipes out Poland, teams up with Russia and forces Great Britain and France to accept a punitive peace—then the last shreds of illusion will quickly be torn from American eyes. Today the British know, and the French know, that the German soldiers marching toward Poland are really marching against the democracies. It would be strange if thoughtful Americans did not realize this, too.

That is why there will be little real neutrality of thought in the war now started. To be neutral in thought means that whether Hitler wins or loses in this tremendous gamble is a matter of indifference. Is there anyone, in Congress or out, who can search his heart and really say it is of no concern to us who wins? If so, he is truly neutral. But it may be doubted that he is truly an American.

Roosevelt to Broadcast Plans To Stay Neutral Tomorrow

By Robert C. Albright

As officials predicted Great Britain and France would declare war on Germany today, President Roosevelt yesterday pledged this Government to a course of neutrality and prepared to assure Americans of his peace aims in a broadcast tomorrow night.

Over three major radio networks, the President will seek to "allay anxiety and relieve suspense" in this country, an aide said. Mr. Roosevelt will review the European situation as it affects this Nation from the White House oval room at 9 p. m.

Announcement of his plan to speak reassuringly to the country followed his humanitarian appeal to five powers against civilian bombings, his exchange of notes with all powers involved, and an almost continuous round of official conferences starting before dawn broke over Washington.

His Sunday night radio talk was expected to elaborate an answer he gave to a question at his press conference yesterday. Asked, "Can we stay out of it?" he replied.

"I not only sincerely hope so, but I believe we can, and every effort will be made by the Administration so to do."

A sleepless official night and the busiest day at White House and State Department since the World War brought these developments:

A reply from the German government to President Roosevelt's two peace appeals to the Fuehrer stating that Hitler has "left nothing untried" to effect a friendly settlement and blaming Poland for failure of peace efforts.

A note from the President to Britain, France, Italy, Germany and Poland asking public statements that their armed forces will not "undertake the bombardment from the air of civilian populations or of unfortified cities."

A reply to this note from Great Britain pledging that should that

3 Nazi Columns Smashing At Poland to Cut Corridor, Pinch Off Silesian Industry; 20 Cities Reported Bombed

Europe today entered what may be the second day of the Second World War, with three German columns smashing deeply into Poland and with the French and British Parliaments expected to declare war before the day's end.

Sole hope lay in the unlikely possibility that Adolf Hitler would bow to a joint British-French "ultimatum" demanding that he call off his undeclared war on Poland.

German planes had bombed more than 20 Polish cities. There were reports of growing casualty lists. But Germans stoutly asserted, as did the Japanese in China, that only "military objectives" were bombed.

Both France and Britain decreed general mobilization after the Polish government asked for help under the London-Paris-Warsaw mutual guarantee pacts.

Paris and London, resigned to war, were in the midst of evacuation of millions of civilians.

Hitler Threatens 10-Year War

Britain and France warned Hitler it will be a long war with 13,000,000 British and French troops pitted against him, as well as vastly superior naval strength and overwhelming reserves of men, money and materials.

But Hitler retorted Britain wants a world war and Germany will go ahead with the course she has chosen even if it means "a 10-year war."

Italy announced it would take no initiative in military operations.

American officials drafted a series of proclamations designed to preserve United States neutrality.

Prime Minister Chamberlain, addressing Parliament yesterday, referred to "this terrible catastrophe," as though a general conflict already was under way or assured.

Chamberlain said if Adolf Hitler's reply to "this last warning" proved unfavorable, "we are ready."

"We shall stand at the bar of history," said Chamberlain, "knowing that the responsibility for this terrible catastrophe rests on the shoulders of one man—the German Chancellor."

Soviet Russia, partner of Germany in a new pact of nonaggression which Nazis claim soon will lead to a military agreement, remained on the sidelines.

Nazis Strike on Three Fronts

The German armies invading Poland—all highly mobile forces—struck southward from the East Prussian frontier on the north and drove about 10 miles across Polish soil against fierce resistance.

On the west, a force struck across the Polish Corridor in an effort to cut off the Free City of Danzig, which was "annexed" to the Reich by Hitler's proclamation early Friday, and also in an effort to isolate the Polish port of Gdynia on the Baltic.

The heaviest fighting was on Poland's southwestern border, opposite

Holding All Fronts, Poles Say; Report 16 Nazi Planes Downed

By the Associated Press

Warsaw, Sept. 1 (via Budajest).—Battles between German and Polish troops raged unabated tonight in Polish border areas, a general staff communique said.

"The Polish lines are just about where they were when the German attack was launched Friday morning—practically on the frontier," Poles claimed.

The most violent fighting was reported from Silesia, one of the three main sectors in which Germany launched its invasion of Poland early today to begin her undeclared war.

The general staff said 16 German warplanes were shot down and that Nazi fliers had bombed a score of Polish cities, including Warsaw. Two Polish planes were lost.

Casualties had not been determined.

Huge, high-flying bombers dropped large cargoes of explosives in the Warsaw area close on the heels of similar raids on numerous smaller cities. The land attacks, official advices said, were in these main sectors:

First, from East Prussia against Dzliadowo and Mlawa; second, from Pomerania against Chojnice at the narrowest part of the disputed Corridor, and third, from Breslau against Katowice.

The Nazi air raiders succeeded in getting over Warsaw after they had been balked in four earlier attempts.

The first communique from the Polish general staff asserted that 16 German airplanes were shot down during the various air raids throughout the scene of operations and that two Polish planes were lost in air battles.

The communique stated that Polish troops gained possession of two German armored trains.

Apparently directing their attack on bridges across the Vistula River, Poland's outlet to the sea, the air raiders started the hour and ten minute attack at 4:30 p. m. (10:35 a. m., Eastern standard time). An hour later they came back and headed toward government buildings in the center of the city.

A visit to the highway and railroad bridges across the Vistula, immediately after the "all clear" signals were given, disclosed there was no visible damage.

Both bridges was intact and traffic was proceeding normally.

There was no sign of damage to buildings in the vicinity, although

Capital Plans Outings Over Labor Day

Many Qualifying Holiday on Whether Europe Goes to War

Frayed by a week of war-crisis excitement and a month of sweltering temperatures, Washingtonians yesterday made plans for what they hoped would be a nerve-resting Labor Day week-end.

Among the hopefuls were State Department officials and President Roosevelt, who is tentatively counting on going to Hyde Park for his annual Labor Day picnic there.

While excursions and short trips promised to be as numerous as in other years, many admitted that "if war comes" they would stay home to "listen and read about it."

Look to Next Week

School groups who had hoped to go abroad to study and Washingtonians whose ships to Europe and Bermuda are staying in harbor were consoling themselves with still-optimistic views of what next week has to offer.

The Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, calling for a reverent observance of "Labor Sunday," issued a statement terming "lack of brotherhood" the most menacing evil from which the world is suffering.

"This lack," the statement declared, "is conspicuous in the relationship between race and race, nation and nation, employer and worker."

The American Federation of Government Employes, taking advantage of one of the few holidays to fall on Monday, scheduled a trip to the World's Fair. Special coaches will leave Union Station at 1:30 p. m. Saturday and New York at 6:30 p. m. Monday.

Mrs. Guerry Smith, who was one of the runners-up in the "brains-and-beauty" contest of the Federation, will serve as hostess. Honor guest will be Miss Ida Hines, who was named the "most conscientious" Government worker.

Stores will be closed all day Monday, but will be open Saturday, it was announced by Edwin D. Shaw, secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers Association.

The Ladies Aid Society of the German Orphan Home, at 2200 Good Hope road, will hold its annual Labor Day picnic, it was announced yesterday.

Wanderbirds Plan Outings

The Wanderbirds have scheduled two outings. The first will be a 4-mile hike Sunday morning, starting at the National Theater at 10 a. m. and ending with a swim near Riggs road. The hike will be along the valley of the Northwest Branch, from Burnt Mills, Md. On Labor Day they will swim at Chapel Point, Md.

All library branches will be closed Monday, Miss Clara W. Herbert, acting librarian, announced.

A Labor Day program in honor of Senator Norris, of Nebraska, will be held at Norris Dam, with numerous Government representatives in attendance.

The National Air Races at Cleveland, Saturday through Monday, were credited by airway officials with much of the exceedingly heavy bookings by air over the week-end.

Daylight Bandit Kidnaps Motorist, Takes Car and $46

Under threat of death, William C. Nemeth, 25-year-old War Department clerk, late yesterday afternoon was forced to surrender his car and $46 to a young bandit who jumped into his machine as it stopped for a traffic light at Thirteenth and M streets northwest.

Nemeth told police the holdup man—described as about 25 and well dressed—pressed a "hard object" in his side and ordered him to drive out Rhode Island avenue. At about Eighth street, Nemeth reported, the bandit took over the wheel and drove to the District line, where he shoved Nemeth out of the car and sped away into Maryland.

Throughout the ride, investigators were told, the youth threatened to kill Nemeth if he didn't obey commands and just before ordering him from the car, rifled his pockets.

The robber was of medium build with light hair and wore a seersucker suit.
